The picture of xxii. godly and faithfull christians, apprehended about Colchester, prisoned together in one band, and so with three leaders at the most, brought vp to London.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1789. an. 1557.

Charlis, before spokyn of, sone of Pepyn, escapyd the daunger of prisonement.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 145.

It is to be asked what shal become of our wyues whome chance and necessitie hath gotten vnto us here for the only comfort of our prisonment?

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 119.

Or shall our children or our brethren acknowledge vs being prison-slaves.—Id. Ib.

During which time of imprisonment there, I found amongst those my prison-fellowes some that had knowen me before in Mexico.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 485.

—Then did the king enlarge

The spleene he prisoned, uttering this: Antiochus? till now,

We grant thee wise, but in this act what wisdom utter'st thou?

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

With that great chaine, wherewith not long ygoe
He bound that pitteous lady prisoner, now relest, Himselfe she bound.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Yet though he never list to me relent,
But let me waste in woe my wretched yeares,
Yet will I never of my love repent,
But loy that for his sake I suffer prisonment.

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 12.

And whilst the nymphs that near this place disposed were to play
At barley-break and prison-base, do pass the time away.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 1.

And so [he] put them both into the prison-house, and made the doors be shut after them.—North. Plut. p. 668.

So thine shall be the beauteous prize, while I Must languish in despair, in prison die.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

The justice, before whom the prisoner is brought, is bound immediately to examine the circumstances of the crime alleged: and to this end by Stat. 2. and 3 Phil. and M. c. 10.
he is to take in writing the examination of such prisoner,
and the information of those who bring him.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 22.

Right reverend fathers, we perceive the godly forwardness in your good lordships, in the restitution of this noble church of England to the pristine state and unity of Christ's church.—Burnet. Low. House of Convo. to Upper. Hen. VIII.

But as it [health] hath recovered the pristine strength, which thing only in all the fight it coveted, shall it incontnient be astonished?—More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 7.

But bycause there appered to be in hym the pristine auctorytie and maiestie of a kynge, they wolde no longer suffre hym to continue in that dignitie, than by the space of
vi. monethes.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 2.

Parliaments never recover their pristine dignity, honour, power, privileges, if this should miscarry.

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. ii. p. 29.

They but attend the waving of your caduce, and immediately they reinvest their pristine shapes.

Carew. Cælum Britannicum.

He [Becket] procured two legates to be sent from the pope to the king to curse him and all the whole realme, if the king would not restore him againe to his pristine state and dignitie.—Grafton. Hen. II. an. 13.

PRITTL-PRATTLE, i. e. prattle-prattle;
the reduplication—for the sake of emphasis.

There arose a new stir in Rome immediately, and every man's mouth was full of prittle-prattle and seditious words.

Fr. Priver, privé, privation; It. Privare, privato, privazione; Sp. Privar, pri-vacion; Lat. Privare, from privus, which Vossius derives from Gr. Πρι-ειν, emere, "censeo, dici privum, quod quis sibi emit, atque ita privum et proprium fecit."
See DEPRIVE.

To prive or deprive, then,
is,—

To make our own peculiar property; to appropriate to ourselves; and, thus,—to take away, withdraw, or withhold from another; to take away, bereave, or despoil. Private or privy.—

Appropriated, withdrawn, secreted to ourselves, or our own use; secret, sequestered, retreated, retired, solitary; clandestine, hidden, concealed;
inmost or intimate, familiar or acquainted with,
admitted to, the inmost thoughts, feelings, actions, or concerns.

Daniel. On the Death of the Earl of Devonshire.

The same princes of the cities that had ben with him before, returned vnto Cesar, and desired they myght haue leaue to common with him priuely and in secret, of matters concerning the welfare and well doying both of him and of them al.—Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 23.

Wherefore Sylla immediately, without making any of the magistrates priuy, caused foreshore men's names to be set up upon posts, whom he would put to death.

North. Plutarch, p. 403.

Faustulus, chief neat-herd to Amulius, took up the two children, and nobody knew it, as some say; or as others report (the likeliest to be true) with the priuity and knowledge of Numitor, Amulius' brother.—Id. Ib. p. 17.

Sal. The Count Melvone, a noble lord of France, Whose priuate with me of the dolphins loue, Is much more general, then these lines import.

Shakespeare. King John, Act iv. sc. 3.

Nor must I be unmindful of my private; For which I have call'd my brother, and the tribunes, My kins-folke, and my clients to be neere me.

B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iii.

And we have seen more princes ruined By their immoderate fav'ring privately, Than by severity in general: For best he's liked, that is alike to all!

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Always certain it is, that he drew him first into the fatal circle from a kind of resolved privateness at his house at Lampsie, in South Wales.—Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 162.

Or at least that it [learning] doth divert men's travels from action and business, and bringeth them to a love of leisure and privateness.

Bacon. The Advancement of Learning, b. i.

If you had been a privado, and of the cabinet council with your angel guardian, from him you might have known how many dangers you have escaped, how often you have been near a ruin, so near, that if you had seen your danger with a sober spirit, the fear of it would have half killed you.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

Distance is nothing else but the priuation of tactual union, and the greater distance the greater priuation, and the greater priuation the more to doe to regain the former positive condition.—More. Antidote to Atheism, App. pt. i. c. 8.

No one of them had voices enough to exclude the other three from making a duke: for to this priuative power are required seventeen balls at least.

Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 261.

This indifferency of matter to motion or rest may be understood two wayes; either priuatively, that is to say, that it has not any real or active propension to rest more then to motion, or vice versa.

More. The Immortality of the Soul, pt. iii. c. 11.

Tis true, indeed, the immediate product of this sort of virtue, is only, at least chiefly, priuative happiness, or, the happiness of rest and indolence, which consists in not being miserable, or, in a perfect cessation from all such acts and motions as are hurtful and injurious to a rational spirit.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

The devils are not determined to one in individuo but in kind only, as being determined to do evil in the general, and that only priuatively for want of motive or inducement to do otherwise.—Whitby. On the Five Points, Dis. iv. c. 1. s. 5.

It is seen among privateers that nothing sooner emboldens them sooner to mutiny than want.

Dampier. Voyage, an. 1684.

But a priuation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or a horse is deaf, or blind, or dead, or if a physician or a divine be unlearned, these are called priuations.—Watts. Logick, pt. i. c. 2.

Private wrongs are an infringement or priuation of the private or civic rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals, and are thereupon frequently termed civil injuries.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

PRIVILEGE, n. } Fr. Privilege; It. Privilegio; Sp. Privilegio, privilegiar; Lat. Privilegium, i. e. priva lex, privata lex; a privy or private law.

A law for private or separate persons; separated from, or exclusive of, others; an appropriate or peculiar law or rule or right; a peculiar immunity, liberty, or franchise.

To privilege,—to have or give a privilege or peculiar immunity, liberty, or franchise; an immunity or exemption from general law or rule.

Certes it [the paternoster] is privileged of three things in his dignitee, for whiche it is more digne than any other prayer.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The privilege of regalie Was safe.

Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Though they be by the laws exempt and privileged from labour, yet they exempt not themselves.

More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 4.

Albe it that seynt Gregory hadde grauted vnto London the pryuelage of y^e archebisshoppes see.

Fabyan, vol. i. c. 59.

Look how the day-hater, Minerva's bird, Whilst privileg'd with darkness and the night, Doth live secure t'himself, of others fear'd.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

King Athelstane is taken here for the chiefe privileger of the towne.—Harrison. Description of Britaine, c. 12.

To turn him [a child] loose to an unrestrained liberty, before he has reason to guide him, is not the allowing him the privilege of his nature to be free; but to thrust him out amongst brutes, and abandon him to a state as wretched, and as much beneath that of a man as theirs.

Locke. On Government, b. ii. c. 6. s. 63.

As this liberty is not indulged in any other government, either republican or monarchical; in Holland and Venice, more than in France or Spain; it may very naturally give occasion to the question, how it happens that Great Britain alone enjoys this peculiar privilege?—Hume, pt. i. Ess. 2.

Privilege, in Roman jurisprudence, means the exemption of one individual from the operation of a law.

Mackintosh. Study of the Law of Nature, p. 50. Note.

PRIZE, n. } Fr. Pris, taken; past part. of PRIZE, v. } the verb prendre, to take; and PRIZER. } upon which past part. the verb
PRICE, n. } prizer is formed. (See HAND.)
PRICE, v. } Price,— purchase or payment, as an equivalent; and, consequentially, the sum at which a thing is rated or valued; value, esteem. Price,—

That which is taken, undertaken; an undertaking or enterprise; that which is taken, captured, gained, acquired, won; and, consequentially, reward or remuneration; booty. And to prize, consequentially,—

To set a price (a high price) upon any thing; to reckon or account at a (great) price; to value, to estimate, to esteem.

Hys fader adde of him eke gret joye & prys, That so gode sygne adde so gong, to be stalwarde & wys.

R. Gloucester, p. 346.

A hardy knyght was he, ouer all bare the pris, At Jerusalem cite, opon Gode's enmys.—R. Brunne, p. 103.

Was neuer at Saynt Denys feste holden more hy, Ne was of more pris, ne serued so redy.—Id. p. 235.

Whi hath Sathanas temptid thin herte that thou lie to the Hooli Goost and to defraude of the prys of the feed?

Wiclif. Dedis, c. 5.

Ananias, how is it y^t Sathan hath fylled thyne heart, that thou shouldest lye vnto the Holy Goost, and kepe away parte of the pryce of the lyuelod.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

The fend sayth, I wol chace and pursue man by wicked suggestion, and I wol hint him by meying and stirring of sinne, and I wol depart my pris, or my prey, by deliberation, and my lust shal be accomplished in delit.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Great loos hath largesse, and great prise, For both wise folke and unwise Were wholly to her bandon brought, So well with yefth hath she wrought.—Id. Rom. of the R.

It is a singular benefite and suche a special prerogatyue as cannot for y^e great dignitie therof sufficiently be priced to remaine and lyue in the church, that he may be partaker of all those thigs wherby God doth vouchsafe to allure and to ioynge his children vnto hym.

Calvin. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

— Wherefore he now begunne To challenge her anew, as his owne prize, Whom formerly he had in battell wonne, And proffer made by force her to reprize.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

— Thou damned wight, The author of this fact we here behold, What iustice can but iudge against thee right, With thine owne blood to price his blood, here shed in sight?

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 9.

Though vertue then were held in highest price, In those old times of which I doe intreat, Yet then likewise the wicked seede of vice Began to spring.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 1.

And (greeting Hector) askt him this: Wilt thou be once advis'de? am thy brother, and thy life with mine is evenly prised.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

— Atrides? give not streame To all thy power, nor force his prize; but yeeld her still his owne, As all men else do.—Id. Ib. b. i.

— I'll instruct you further As I wait on your worship: If I play not my prize To your full content, and your uncle's much vexation Hang up Jack Marrall.

Massinger. New Way to pay Old Debts, Act iv. sc. 2.

— Patroclus, thy conceit, Gave thee th' eversion of our Troy; and to thy fleete a freight Of Trojan ladies, their free lives, put all in bands by thee: But (too much prizer of thy selfe) all these are propt by me.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Tutour of Athens! he, in every street, Dealt priceless treasure! goodness his delight, Wisdom his wealth, and glory his reward.

Thomson. Liberty, pt. ii.

No: dear as freedom is, and in my heart's Just estimation priz'd above all price, I had much rather be myself the slave, And wear the bonds, than fasten them on him.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Who claim'd the foremost praise a thousand eyes Might now be witness, and adjudge the prize.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xi.

That can or may be proved; demonstrable; but probable, by usage, is now distinguished from demonstrable. See the quotation from Locke.

That may be reasonably expected to be or happen to be; having a likelihood, or resemblance, or similarity to truth or reality: a verisimilitude.

The lawes of the cete stont in probacy; They usen non enquestis the wrongis for to try.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Yet there was onely probabilitie, not a certaine and determinate place of habitation selected, neither any demonstration of commoditie there in esse, to induce his followers.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 160.

Thei said, that the cardinal by visitacions, making of abbottes, probates of testaments, graunting of faculties, licēses, and other pollynges in his courtes legantines, had made his thresoure egall with the kynges.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 17.

If ye thynke them now chaunged, bryng fourth your honest probacyons, and ye shall be heard.

Bale. Apologie, fol. 92.

For the more euident probation wherof (although the thing of itselfe is so euident, that it needeth no prooffe) what can be more plaine, than the wordes themselves of Pelagius and Gregorie.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 12.

No man in religion is properly a heretic at this day, but he who maintains traditions or opinions not probable by scripture.—Milton. Of Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

He who holds in religion that belief, or those opinions which to his conscience and utmost understanding appear with most evidence or probability in the scripture, though to others he seems erroneous, can no more be justly censur'd for a heretic than his censurers; who do but the same thing themselves while they censure him for so doing.—Id. Ib.

I here mean by conscience or religion, that full persuasion whereby we are assur'd that our belief and practice, as far as we are able to apprehend, and probably make appear, is according to the will of God and his holy scripture within us.—Milton. Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

Poor plodding school-men they are far too low,
Which by probations, rules, and axioms go.

Drayton. Edw. IV. to Mrs. Shore.

That were miserable indeed to be a courtier of Maronilla, and withal of such a hapless invention, as that no way should be left me to present my meaning, but to make myself a canting probationer of orisons.

Milton. An Apology of Smectymnuus, s. 8.

As demonstration is the shewing the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of one or more proofs, which have a constant, immutable, and visible connection one with another; so probability is nothing but the appearance of such an agreement or disagreement, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant and immutable, or at least is not perceived to be so but is, or appears for the most part to be so, and is enough to induce the mind to judge the proposition to be true or false, rather than the contrary.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 15. s. 1.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; though it is hard for an author to judge against himself. But more probably it is in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it.

Dryden. Abraham & Achitophel, Pref.

A state of purgation, they imagined to consist of a probational fire.—Wheatley. On the Common Prayer, c. 6.

He undertakes to prove, that the grace of God is so far "efficacious" as to produce in the minds of all who hear the gospel, during their probationary state, moral power to comply with its requirements.

Whitby. On the Five Points, Advert.

This was his condition, and thus he was bred and train'd up, as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, a candidate for hell, and a probationer for damnation.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

John Reynolds, the most noted epigrammatist next to Job. Owen and Sir Jo. Harrington of his time, received his first being in this world at Tuddington in Bedfordshire, was elected probationer of New Coll. from Wykeham's school near to Winchester, in 1600.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

He has afforded us the twilight of probability suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership.—Locke.

Some are only probative, and designed to try and stir up those virtues which before lay dormant in the soul.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

Some nominated and appointed for probators.

Maydman. Naval Speculations, p. 182.

The period of the duration of this present probatory state of the system of Saturn, seems confin'd and limited in revelation to the number of the elect's being accomplished.

Cheyne. On Regimen, Dis. 5.

The planets and other celestial orbs revolving about him [the Sun] at their respective distances, and performing their revolutions in different periods of time, will represent the several orders of lapsed intelligences, the different degrees of their lapse, and the duration and continuance of their probatory state.—Id. Ib.

In our anticipations of astronomical phenomena, as well as in those which we form concerning the result of any familiar experiment in physics, philosophers are accustomed to speak of the event as only probable; although our confidence in its happening is not less complete, than if it rested on the basis of mathematical demonstration.

Stewart. Of the Human Mind, vol. ii. c. 4. s. 4.

The existence of the city of Pekin, and the reality of Cæsar's assassination, which the philosopher classes with probabilities, because they rest solely upon the evidence of testimony, are universally classed with certainties by the rest of mankind.—Id. Ib.

Probably the heretical opinions, which had subjected both Abelard and Roscelinus to the censure of the church, might create a prejudice also against their philosophical principles.

Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 4. s. 3.

When the will is so proved, the original must be deposited in the registry of the ordinary; and a copy thereof in parchment is made out under the seal of the ordinary, and delivered to the executor or administrator, together with a certificate of its having been proved before him: all which together is usually styled the probate.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 32.

Of the various views under which human life has been considered, no one seems so reasonable as that which regards it as a state of probation; meaning, by a state of probation, a state calculated for trying us, and calculated for improving us.—Paley, Ser. 33.

It is our duty to consider this life throughout as a probationary state.—Id. Ser. 30.

PROBE, v. } To prove or search for proof, PROBE, n. } (sc.) of the depth of a wound or sore; to search.

VOL. II.

Within the ureter four fingers' breadth a round white stone was lodged, which was so fastened in the part, that the physician with his probe could not stir it, and was fain at last to cut it out.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. The Life by Fell, p. xxxii.

Yet durst she not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping still the nobler parts were sound:
But strove with anodynes t' assuage the smart,
And mildly thus her medicine did impart.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. iii.

As some bold surgeon, with inserted steel, Probes deep the putrid sore, intent to heal.

Falconer. The Demagogue.

PROBITY. Fr. Probité; It. Probità; Sp. Probidad; Lat. Probitas, probus; Gr. Πρεπον, decorum, conveniens.

That which ought to be or be done; rectitude, honour, or honesty, integrity.

If we could once get ourselves possessed of this probité, this purity of mind and heart, it would better instruct us in the use of our liberty, and teach us to distinguish between good and evil.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 7.

This is enough among men of sense and probité.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 367.

PROBLEMA'TICALLY.

PROBLEMATIZE, v.

Fr. Problème; It. and Sp. Problema; Gr. Προβλημα, from προβαλ-λειν, projicere, proponere, to throw out, to put or place before.

Any thing proposed; a proposition; a question proposed; a question proposed, (sc.) for decision or determination; still undecided or undetermined.

B. Jonson, in the New Inn, forms the verb problematize. See in v. ELENCH.

How had this cherl imaginatioun

To shewen swiche a probleme to the frere.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 780.

Many truths are but embryos or problems; nay, some of them seem to be mere paradoxes at first.

Howell, b. iii. Let. 9.

Yet if they had onely doubtfully and problematically commended their purgatory to the church, we might easily have favoured them with a connivence.

Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, s. 11.

Besides this, you have some expressions of Origen, chiefly from those pieces which are either not certainly genuine, or not free from interpolation, or wrote in a problematical way, or not containing Origen's mature and riper thoughts.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 277.

And, therefore, I conceive [præexistence] is left as a matter of school speculation, which without danger may be problematically argued on either hand.

Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, Pref.

The Marquis Beccaria, (c. 16.) in an exquisite piece of railery, has proposed this problem, with a gravity and precision that are truly mathematical; the force of the muscles, and the sensibility of the nerves of an innocent person being given, it is required to find the degrees of pain necessary to make him confess himself guilty of a given crime.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 25. Note.

PROBOSCIS. Lat. Proboscis; Gr. Προβοσκis, προ, and βοσκ-ειν, to feed. Holland does not attempt to naturalize the word.

Their long snout or trunk, which the Latins call proboscis, may be easily cut off; as it appeared by experience in the wars against king Pyrrhus.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 7.

— Like an unbent bow carelessly

His sinewy proboscis did remissly lie.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

— Th' unwieldy elephant

To make them mirth us'd all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

PROCA'CIOUS. } Lat. Procax, a poscendo; PROCA'CITY. } impudens in poscendo vel petendo,—

Impudent in demanding or asking; bold, daring, forward in asking; and thus it appears to be used in the passage quoted by Barrow from Tertullian.

In vaine are all your flatteries,
In vaine are all your knaveries,
Delights, deceits, procacities,
Sighs, kisses, and conspiracies,
And what e're is done by Art,
To bewitch a lover's heart.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 541.

Let, saith he, [Tertullian,] any person, manifestly possessed with the devil, or one who is deemed to be rapt with a divine fury, be set before your tribunals; that spirit being commanded by a Christian to speak, shall as truly there confess himself to be a devil, as elsewhere a God. If he do not so confess, not daring to lie, even there spill the blood of that procacious christian.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

PROCATA'RTICK. Gr. Προ-καταρκτηκος, from προ-κατα-αρχεσθαι, to begin, to precede.

That can or may precede, forego, or forerun.

'Tis true that his [Harrington's] close restraint, which did not agree with his high spirit, and hot and rambling head, was the procatactical cause of his delirium or madness.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

God often useth even the guilt of that very sinne to terrifie thee; to cast a man into distresse and to keep him in it, it is both the procatactical cause and the executioner of it.

Goodwin. Childs of Light, p. 168.

proceessionals, manuals, &c. after the vse of Sarum.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1211. an. 1549.

Then he forth on his journey did procede,
To seeke adventures which mote him befall.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

The only procede (that I may use the mercantil term) you can expect is thanks, and this way shall not be wanting to make you rich returns.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 29.

He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great, nor too small tasks; for the first will make him dejected by often faylings; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings.

Bacon. Ess. Of Nature in Men.

He overcame the difficulty in defiance of all such pretences as were made even from religion itself to obstruct the better procedure of real and material religion.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

She therefore assembled her forces, and marched towards them to prevent their further proceedings, defeated them two several times, and gained their island.

North. Plutarch, p. 49.

Isab. In brieve, to set the needlesse processe by;
How I perswaded, how I praid, and kneel'd,
How he refeld me, and how I replide.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

— If in the course
And processe of this time, you can report,
And proue it too, against mine honor, aught;
My bond to wedlocke, or my loue and dutie
Against your sacred person; in God's name Turne me away.

Id. Hen. VIII. Act ii. sc. 4.

And all the priests and fryers in my realme,
Shall in proceession sing her endlesse prayse.

Id. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 8.

In the yeere fine hundred and six it was by the counsell of Aurelia decreed, that the whole church should bestow yearly at the feast of Pentecost three dayes in that kind of processionarie service.—Hooker. Eccles. Politic. b. v. § 41.

If the external procedures of God's providence be the rule to measure his love or hatred by, then it cannot be avoided, but that the rich and powerful have the fairest plea for heaven, and the martyrs the shrewdest marks of reprobation.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 11.

Rank'd in procession walk the pious train,
Offering first-fruits and spikes of yellow grain.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

It is very manifest that Novatian supposes the son to have existed before that procession, coming forth, or nativity, which he speaks of in that chapter.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 97.

The act of the will, in each step of the forementioned procedure, does not come to pass without a particular cause, every act is owing to a prevailing inducement.
Edwards. On the Will, pt. ii. s. 6.

The next step for carrying on the suit, after suing out the original, is called the process; being the means of compelling the defendant to appear in court.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 19.

Is it unreasonable to suppose that, if the meaning of this word from, and of its correspondent prepositions in other languages, had been clearly understood, the Greek and Latin churches would never have differed concerning the eternal procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father, or from the Father and the Son? And that, if they had been determined to separate, they would at least have chosen some safer cause of schism?
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. c. 9. Note.

PROCE'RE. } Fr. Procerité; Sp. Proceridad, PROCE'RITY. } from Lat. Procerus; eminent,

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 532. Note.

We shall make attempts to lengthen out the human figure, and restore it to its ancient procerity.—Addison.

PROCIDENCE. As the Lat. Procidencia; (pro, and cadere, to fall;) Fr. Procidence,—a falling down of a thing out of its right place, (Cotgrave;) as the providence of the matrix. Used by Ferrand on Melancholy, (1640,) p. 15.

PROCINCT. Lat. Procinctus, pro, and cingere, to gird.

Girt, (sc.) for battle; prepared, ready.

Warr he perceav'd, warr in procinct, and found Already known what he for news had thought
To have reported. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

PROCLAIM, v. } Fr. Proclamer; It. Pro-
PROCLAIMER. } clamare; Sp. Proclamer; PROCLAMA'TION. } Lat. Proclamare,— PROCLAY'ING, n. } To call or cry out, before or in presence of, openly, publicly; to tell, declare, or pronounce, openly or publicly.

The hygh God hath hym proclaimed
Full of knyghthode and all grace.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

The kingdome of heauen and a newe priesthood sprang vp, wherof John the son of Zacharie was chosen and specially appoynted to be an open preacher and proclaymer.
Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Moreouer sending heraultes about, they made proclamation, that if there were anye Gall, or any Romane, that would turne to them betwene that and three of the clock, he should be taken to mercy.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 139.

Now had the great proclamer with a voice
More awfull than the sound of trumpet, cri'd
Repentance, and heaven's kingdom nigh at hand
To all baptiz'd. Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

For there is a certain majesty in plainness; as the proclamation of a prince never frisks it in tropes, or fine conceits, in numerous and well-turned periods, but commands in sober, natural expression.—South, vol. v. Ser. 11.

Is not the piety and obedience of our lives a proclaiming of God to be our king, and a recognizing of him for our great master.—Id. vol. vi. Ser. 11.

These proclamations have then a binding force, when (as Sir Edward Coke observes) they are grounded upon and enforce the laws of the realm.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

PROCLIVE. } Fr. Proclif; It. Proclive; PROCLIVITY. } Lat. Proclivus, (pro, and clivus; Gr. Κλίτος, from κλιν-ειν, to bend.) See DECLIVE.

Bending forward to, bending towards; inclined or disposed, prone or apt to.

Whiche nacions surely, be euer proclive and ready, to commocion and rebellion.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 13.

And it is a great thing for a man to rule one wife rightly and ordnately: for a woman is fraile and proclive unto all evils.—Latimer. First Sermon before King Edward, fol. 29.

And still retain'd a natural proclivity to ruin.
Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 1.

That is stiled an abstract active, which implies a proclivity to action, as regnativity, amateness, or amorousness.
Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 1.

And thus the very supposition of difficulty in the way of a man's duty, or proclivity to sin, through a being given up to hardness of heart, or indeed by any other means whatsoever, is an inconsistency, according to Dr. Whitby's notions of liberty, virtue, and vice, blame and praise.
Edwards. On the Will, pt. i. s. 3.

PRO-CONSUL. } Lat. Pro-consul, pro
PROCONSULAR. } consule.
PROCONSULARY. } One who acts for or in the place of consul.

He was retheynyng to Sergius Paulus, which was proconsul, that is to saie lieftenaunt, or the lorde deputie of that islande, and was a wyse man and of good experience.
Udal. The Actes of the Apostles, c. 13.

She was busie about her fish pooles of Baia, when by my [Agrippina] counsels, Neroes adoption: proconsularie authority; election to be consul; and other steps to mount to the empire were procured.
Grenaway. Tacitus. Annales, b. xiii. c. 5.

She was now occupied in trimming the canals of her villa at Baia, when by my councils and management he was adopted into the Claudian name, invested with the proconsular authority, designed to the consulship, and all other measures taken proper for acquiring him the empire.

Hall. Hen. VII. an. 1.

How can the pope's holiness of conscience, honour, or virtue, living or dying, thus procrastinate or put over the immediate finishing thereof, according to the king's desire.
Burnet. Records, b. ii. No. 23.

But all's become lost labour, and my cause
Is still procrastinated. Brewer. Lingua, Act i. sc. 1.

Procrastination in temporals is always dangerous, but in spirituals it is often damnable.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 10.

The enemy of mankind hath furnished thee with an evasion; for that he may make smooth the way to perdition, he will tell the procrastinator, that the thief upon the cross was heard by our Saviour at the last hour.
Junius. Sin stigmatized, (1639,) p. 543.

Procrastination is the thief of time,
Year after year it steals, till all are fled,
And to the mercies of a moment leaves
The vast concerns of an eternal scene.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

Our resolutions of vigour and exertion are often broken or procrastinated in the execution.
Burke. To Sir H. Langrishe.

Unprocreate Father, ever-procreate Son,
Ghost breath'd from both, you were, are still, shall be,
(Most blessed) three in one, and one in three.
Drummond. Hymn on the Fairest Fair.

Poor and low-pitched desires, if they do but mix with those other heavenly intentions that draw a man to this study, it is justly expected that they should bring forth a base-born issue of divinity, like that of those imperfect and putrid creatures that receive a crawling life from two most unlike procreants, the Sun and mud.
Milton. Animad. on the Remonstrants' Defence.

To whom thus half abasht Adam repli'd.
Neither her outside formed so fair, nor aught
I' procreation common to all kinds.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act v. sc. 2.

Ev'n yet an ancient Tyanæan shows
A spreading oak, that near a linden grows,
The neighbourhood confirm the prodigy,
Grave men, not vain of tongue, or like to lie.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred
From thence did soon to open streets aspire,
And straight to palaces and temples spread.

Id. Annus Mirabilis.

We may justly (I say) stand amazed that men should be so prodigiously supine and negligent in an affair of this nature and importance, as we see they generally are.

Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 2.

The arithmetical prodigy, alluded to in the text, is an American boy, (still, I believe, in London,) of whose astonishing powers in performing, by a mental process, hitherto unexplained, the most difficult numerical operations, some accounts have lately appeared in various literary journals.

Stewart. Of the Mind, vol. ii. Note E.

We suddenly found ourselves in an immense hall, lighted up with a prodigious number of candles.

PRODITORY.

PRODITORIOUS.

Fr. Prodition; Lat. Proditio, from prodere; pro, or porro dare; to give, bring, or put forth; to disclose or discover; and, consequentially, to betray.

A discovering or disclosing, a betraying, treason or treachery.

Certes, it had bene better for thee not to haue accused the king of this prodition.—Grafton. Henry II. an. 18.

But the Christian blood shed by his instigation and command (saith he) cries yet louder to God; yea, the blood of the church, which the sword of his tongue in a miserable prodition hath shed, cries out against him.

Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. iii. s. 8.

Winch. I doe, thou most usurping proditor,
And not protector of the king or realme.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Henry VI. Act i. sc. 3.

That touch of conscience he [Charles] bore with greater regret than for any other sin committed in his life, whether it were that proditory aid sent to Rochel, and religion abroad, or that prodigality of shedding blood at home.

Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilike.

I will hasten to those more solid and conclusive characters, which, as I have said, are emergent from the mind; and which oftentimes do start out of children when themselves least think of it; for let me tell you, nature is proditorious.—Wotton. Remains, p. 82.

Broome. To a Lady of thirty.

The divine will is absolute; it is its own reason: it is both the producer and the ground of all its acts.

South, vol. viii. Ser. 10.

According to the genuine hypothesis of the atomick atheism, all imaginable forms of inanimate bodies, plants, and animals, as centaurs, scyllas, and chimæras, are producible by the fortuitous motions of matter.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 673.

There being nothing contained in the notion of substance inconsistent with such a producibility, or with novelty of existence, no more than there is in the notion of figure, or of motion, which things no man hardly denies to receive a new existence.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

That alone will suffice to destroy the universality and in-tireness of their hypothesis, and besides give cause to suspect, that by further industry, the producibility of other principles also may be discovered.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 661.

Trade, then, is necessary to the producing of riches, and money necessary to the carrying on of trade.

Locke. Considerations on Interest.

The value of land consists in this, that, by its constant production of saleable commodities, it brings in a certain yearly income.—Id. Ib.

Yet here all products and all plants abound,

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

The Orphick theology calls the first principle, hermaphroditick, or male and female together; thereby denoting that essence, that is generative or productive of all things.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 302.

And the third is sometimes said to be παντα φυσικως, all things animally; that is, self-movably and productively.

Id. Ib. p. 582.

It is evident, he means not only external actions, but the acts of choice themselves, when he speaks of all free actions as the produce of free choice.

Edwards. On the Will, pt. ii. s. 10.

But there are many things which have no such positive productive influence; which yet are causes in that respect, that they have truly the nature of a ground or reason why some things are, rather than others; or why they are as they are, rather than otherwise.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. s. 3.

It is a great mortification to the vanity of man, that his utmost art and industry can never equal the meanest of nature's productions, either for beauty or value.

Hume, pt. i. Ess. 15.

There is one sort of labour which adds to the value of the subject upon which it is bestowed; there is another which has no such effect. The former, as it produces a value, may be called productive, the latter, unproductive labour.

Not unamaz'd she thus in answer spake.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

This contempt of the world may be a piece of proemial piety, an usher or baptist to repentance.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 492.

From the consideration of this, Moses might here very well proeme the repetition of the covenant with this upbraiding reprehension.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 13.

The proeme, or preamble, is often called in to help the construction of an act of parliament.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. Introd. s. 2.

PRO'FACE. Mr. Nares has added to the number of instances of this word collected by the commentators on Shakespeare. Steevens conjectured that the origin of it was to be found in Cotgrave, who says,—“Prou for proufit; whence, Bon prou leur face, Much good may it do them;” and this Mr. Nares confirms from Rochefort: “Prouface, prounface: souhait qui veut dire, bien vous fasse: proficiat.” Hence Nares infers that we had the word from the Norman romance language.

Da. Sweet sir, sit: Ile be with you anon: most sweete, sir, sit. Master Page, good Master Page, sit: proface.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 3.

The cardinall came in booted and spurred, all sodainly amongst them, and bade them proface.

take part in the solemnities. Varro gives a different account, (lib. v. p. 65. Ed. Biponti.) The Fr. usage is—

“Lay, temporal, worldly, wicked, unholy, ungodly; unhallowed, violated; turned from a holy to a common, from a divine to a humane use,” (Cotgrave.) And the English verb, to profane—

To use holy things, with unhallowed hands, to unholy purposes; to pollute, to violate.

But he commandeth to breke them al to poulder, and to prophane their places and tabernacles euen to make them lothely and abominable.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 3. p. 35.

And there in a certaine chappell not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage: hath in contempt of the keyes, presumed of his owne rashnesse to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 430. an. 1391.

I do pass ouer that ye singing it selfe in an vnknown tonge is manifest prophanaciō of God's praises, and of holy scripture, as S. Paule doth admonish in the xiv. to the Corinthians.—Calvin. Foure Godly Sermons, Ser. 1.

And whoso is religious and wise may observe, that the contempt of the clergy is the high way to atheism and all prophaneness.—Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. pt. ii. No. 18.

One of the Tribunes also accused Clodius, and burdened him that he had prophaned the holy ceremonies of the sacrifices.—North. Plutarch, p. 721.

But remember, that prophaneness is commonly something that is external; and he is a prophane person who neglects the exterior part of religion: and this is so vile a crime, that hypocrisie while it is undiscovered is not so much mischievous as open prophaneness, or a neglect and contempt of external religion.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

Yearly my vows, O heavens, have I not paid,
Of the best fruits and firstlings of my flock?
And oftentimes have bitterly inveigh'd
'Gainst them that you profanely dar'd to mock?

Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 9.

They alienate men's hearts and thoughts from God, and heavenly things; they tip their tongues with vanitie and prophaneness, which should flow with grace and holinesse.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 3.

During all the sacred time of his nativity, when they should be most holy, [they] are more especially, and that professedly too, a most impure people.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act viii. sc. 3.

Amongst so many great foundations of colleges in Europe, I find strange that they are all dedicated to professions, and none left free to Arts and Sciences at large.

Bacon. On the Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

Neither is it to be forgotten, that this dedicating of foundations and donations to professory learning hath not only had a malign aspect and influence upon the growth of Sciences, but hath also been prejudicial to States and Governments.—Id. Ib.

Thus our eighth Henry's marriage they defame;

They say the schism of beds began the game,

Divorcing from the church to wed the dame:

Though largely prov'd, and by himself profess'd,

That conscience, conscience would not let him rest.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

In the strength of this almighty principle also they would openly and professedly call their seizing upon the goods, lands, and estates of the royalists a robbing of the Egyptians.

South, vol. v. Ser. 7.

The truth is, those persons, for their professorial interest, and to keep the Pagan system in some countenance against the objections of Christians, had quite altered the old schemes of philosophy.—Bentley. Of Free Thinking, s. 43.

Another serjeant-painter in this reign was John Brown, who, if he threw no great lustre on his profession, was at least a benefactor to its professors.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

In that military kingdom no part of the profession had been much regarded, except the highest of all, who often united to their professional offices great family splendour, and were invested with great power and authority.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

The great and enlightened minds, whose judgments have been transmitted to posterity as oracles of legal wisdom, were formed (it may be safely presumed) not by the habits of their professional warfare, but by contending with these habits, and shaking off their dominion.

Stewart. The Human Mind, vol. ii. c. 3. s. 2.

From the University of Glasgow, Dr. Reid's Inquiry received a still more substantial testimony of approbation; the author having been invited by that learned body to the Professorship of Moral Philosophy, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Smith.—Id. Life of Reid, § 1.

PROFILE. } Fr. Profile, wrought or done
PRO'FILE, v. } in thread; It. Proffilo; Sp. Perfil; the outline of a picture or draught, so called from filum, a thread, a thread-like line; filorum, (i.e.) linearum deductio et designatio, (Skinner.) (See PURFLE.) It is now applied to—

The delineation of the side face; the side face: the Fr. was formerly applied to the very middle or middle line of the face, (Cotgrave, in v. Pourfil.)

[The daughter of Dibutades] being in love with a certain young man, whensoever hee was to take a long journey far from home, used ordinarily to marke upon the wall the shadow of her lover's face by candle light, and to pourfill the same afterward deeper, that so shee might enjoy his visage yet in his absence.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 12.

Thus, in portraits, the painter will not take that side of the face, which has some notorious blemish in it; but either draw it in profile, (as Apelles did Antigonus, who had lost one of his eyes,) or else shadow the more imperfect side.
Dryden. A Parallel of Poetry & Painting.

Till about the end of the third century, when there was a general decay in all the arts of designing, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face. They always appear in profil, to use a French term of art.—Addison. On Medals, Dial. 3.

I have a head of the same woman drawn with black lead on the leaf of a vellum pocket-book; on the reverse is his own portrait in profile; both masterly.

He who profits of a superior understanding, raises his powers to a level with the height of the superior understanding he unites with.
Burke. Speech on the Army Estimates, 1790.

The revenue derived from labour is called wages: that derived from stock, by the person who manages or employs it, is called profit.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 7.

PROFLIGATE, v. } Lat. Profligare, profligatum, (pro, and fligere,) to dash against.
PROFLIGATE, adj. }
PROFLIGACY. } To throw or dash against, and, consequently, to destroy, to ruin, to throw or dash against, into or among; and, consequentially, to disperse, to discomfit.
PROFLIGATELY. }
PROFLIGATENESS. }
PROFLIGATION. }

Profligate, adj.—ruinous, destructive; of ruinous or destructive morals; careless, heedless of consequences; insensible to shame; depraved, abandoned, shameless.

Subverted many townes, and profligate and discomfited many of them in open battayle, and marcial conflict.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 31.

Is it for thee like a grim herald to give the summons to war? Is it for thee to excite Christian princes (already too much gorged with blood) to the profligation and fearefull slaughter of their owne subjects?
Bp. Hall. To Pope Urban the Eighth.

I doubt not, but all religious talk, if it be warm, and withal prudent, is as much catching, and doth as much execution towards the making men good, as the corrupt and profligate conversation of the world doth towards the making them bad.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 13.

It [religion] attracts love, and commands respect from all that are acquainted with it, unless they be such profligately wicked persons as I just now spoke of.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 2.

And others, who are not chargeable with all this profligateness, yet are in avowed opposition to religion, as if discovered to be groundless.
Butler. Analogy of Religion, pt. ii. Conclusion.

Hitherto it has been thought the highest pitch of profligacy to own, instead of concealing crimes; and to take pride in them, instead of being ashamed of them.
Bolingbroke. Idea of a Patriot King.

You are so witty, profligate, and thin,
At once we think thee Milton's Death and Sin.
Epigram on Voltaire.

One part of that public he [Pope] had much offended by a vigorous war upon the general profligacy of manners.
Warburton. To the Editor of Letters on Patriotism.

He was of opinion, that "the main support of piety and morals consisted in the parochial labours of the clergy; and that if this country could be preserved from utter profligateness and ruin, it must be by their means."
Porteus. Life of Secker.

PROFLUENT. } Lat. Profluens; pres. part.
PROFLUENCE. } of profluere, to flow forward or forth, (pro, and fluere.)
Flowing forward; pursuing a forward course or current.

— Them who shall beleve
Baptizing in the profluent stream, the signe
Of washing them from guilt of sin to life
Pure, and in minds prepar'd, if so befall,
For death, like that which the Redeemer dy'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

In the profluence or proceedings of their fortunes, I observe likewise not only much difference between them; but in the earl, not a little from himself.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 164.

PROFOUND, adj. } Fr. Profond, profonder;

PROFOUNDITY. } may be from the Gr. Bēthos, interpreted by Hesychius—Bēthos, depth.

Having a deep foundation or base; having a bottom at great depth or distance from the surface; deep, low, lowly; bottomless.

He was in all the honest artes and faculties profoundely seen.—Udal, vol. i. Pref. unto the Kinges Maiesities.

Understandynge is necessarye to be hadde whyche must serche profoundly for the greuousnes of euery synne.
Fisher. The Seuen Psalms, Ps. 143.

For they that wyll seke out the profoundnesse of the matter, maye well knowe fro whence ye came, and fro whence he came.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 228.

But in hym was all wysedome and prouydence, he is the profoundite of thy inerrable wysedom, so yt he knew what was proftable for vs, and what was acceptable to thee.
Fisher. The Seuen Psalms, Ps. 32.

Now to profound to the bottom of these diversities, to assign each cause its distinct effects, and to limit them by their just and true proportions; are necessary requisites of science.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 20.

— Hall, horrors, hall!
Infernal world. And thou, profoundest hell, Receive thy new possessour; one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.
And thou thyself seemst otherwise inclin'd
Than to a worldly crown: addicted more
To contemplation and profound dispute.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. i.

These past, if any pass, the void profound
Of unessential night receives him next Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

As this is what the author of the Revelation calleth the depth, or profoundness, of Satan; so, by argument of contraries, the just and lawful sovereignty over men's understanding, by force of truth rightly interpreted, is that which approacheth nearest to the similitude of the divine rule.
Bacon. Of the Advancement of Learning, b. i.

[In his comparisons] the fidelity and sincerity of his judgements equalled their profoundness and their weight.
North. Plutarch, p. 993.

I all good labours plentifully bless,
Yea, all abstruse profundities impart,
Leading men through the tedious ways of art.
Drayton. Legend of Robert Duke of Normandy.

With his huge trident Neptune strikes the floods;
Foams, storms, and tempesting the deeps around,
Bares the broad bosom of the dark profound.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ii.

For if your author be profoundly good,
'Twill cost you dear before he's understood.
Roscommon. On Translated Verse.

It is many times nothing else, but either this shameless impudence or sottish insensibility in atheists, that is admired by the ignorant, for profoundness of wit and learning.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 193.

Thus the trial by jury has been imputed to profound political wisdom, as if a review had been taken of all actual and all possible modes of administering justice; and this had been preferred upon comparison.
Beddoes. On Mathematical Evidence, Note 1.

Inflated and astrut with self-conceit,
He gulps the windy diet; and ere long,
Adopting their mistake, profoundly thinks
The world was made in vain, if not for him.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

In one [Ben Jonson] we may respect the profundity of learning, in the other [Shakespeare] we must admire the sublimity of genius.—Observer, No. 75.

PROFULGENT. Shining forth, (pro, and fulgens.) See EFFULGENT.

Profulgent in preciousness, O Sinope queen,
Of all feminine bearing the scepter and regaly.

CONFUSE.

Poured forth, (sc.) abundantly, excessively;
and, consequentially, too abundant, excessive in liberality, lavish, wasteful, prodigal.

And because of his prodigality and profusions of gifts, he might not spare other men's goods, he took away here and there the riches of other men, and the treasure of the temple, and made sale of all things.
Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 11.

Nor would one say, that one so young could use, (Unless his sonne) a rhetoric so profuse.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

— And the eye
Of Jupiter was then his guard; who pitted him, and used These words to Hermes: Mercurie, thy helpe hath bene profuse,
Euer, with most grace, in consorts of trauellers distrest;
Now consort Priam to the fleet.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

At this speech Democritus profusely laughed, his friends and the people standing by, weeping in the mean time, and lamenting his madness.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, To the Reader.

Are not drunkenness, iouiality, epicurisme, luxury, and profuseness, most rhetorically applauded, most elegantly adorned in our stage-plays, with the sublimest encomiums.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 7.

Besides profusion of our faculties
In gross dull glutty, vap'rous gormandise.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

— There let me draw
Ethereal soul, there drink reviving gales,
Profusely breathing from the spicy groves,
And vales of fragrance.
Thomson. Summer.

But we must not think all our own that accrues to us, so that it is at our liberty, whether we will hoard it up, or spend it profusely.—Sharp. Works, vol. i. p. 100. Ser. 4.

Be the sums never so vast we pay away, their being due,
in spite of their being great, makes the disbursement too much an act of justice, to be one of profuseness.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 255.

He who, with a promiscuous undistinguishing profuseness, does not so much dispense, as throw away what he has, proclaims himself a fool to all the intelligent world about him.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

Henry the VII. seems never to have laid out any money so willingly, as on what he could never enjoy, his tomb—on that he was profuse.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

Profusion, unrestrain'd, with all that's base
In character, has litter'd all the land,
And bred, within the mem'ry of no few,
A priesthood, such as Baal's was of old,
A people, such as never was till now.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

R. Brunne, p. 139.

But thei to geder of progenie
No childre had but a maide,
And she the God so well apayde,
That al the wide worldes fame
Spake worship of hir good name.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

But by chaunge of the diete of our progenytours, there is caused to be in our bodyes, suche alteration frome the nature, whiche was in men at the begynnyng.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 14.

A happy man in his first dayes he was,
And happy father of faire progeny:
For all so many weekes, as the yere has,
So many children he did multiply.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

What the greatest and most holiest of all his predecessors before him, haue done to the least of my progenitors and predecessors before me, let him do the same to me, and I am content.—Grafton. Hen. II. an. 13.

— Ah! whither shall we go?
Down to the grave, down to those happy shades below,
Where all our brave progenitors are blest
With endless triumph and eternal rest.
Pomfret. A Prospect of Death.

What idle progeny succeed

I never dreamed that ministers should be compelled to impugn ministers; the adversaries have good sport betwixt themselves to prognostick the likelihood.
Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. iii. No. 8. Parker's Answer.

If any man's father be sick, the son straight goes vnto the sooth-saying or prognosticating priest, requesting him to demand of his God whether his father shall recouer of that or no.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 58.

Is there any astronomer that more exactly setteth out the ordre and course of the celestiall bodyes: or that more truly doth deuine in his prognostications of the tymes of the

Let now the astrologers, the starre gasers, and prognosti- cators stand vp, and saue thee from these things that shal come vpon thee.—Bible, 1583. Isaiah, lxvii. 13.

This vaporous aire has a confused reflexion of light in it, every way in some proportion like that in mist, or when the sun shines waterishly and prognosticks rain.
More. Immortality of the Soul, pt. iii. b. iii. c. 5.

This is all that I dare present of that nature to any of judgement, not unwillingly omitting certain prognostick anagrams, and such strains of fancy.
Reliquiae Wottonianæ, p. 137.

Mysterious prodigies yet sure they be,
Prognosticks of a rare prosperity:
For, can thy life promise lesse good to men,
Whose birth was th' envy and the care of Heav'n?
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

The causes of this inundation cannot indeed be regular,
and, therefore, their effects not prognosticable like eclipses.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

The Romans then not alone, but the whole inhabitants of Italy were wonderfully afraid, and judged that it was some sign and prognostication of some wonderful thing to come.
North. Plutarch, p. 114.

The prognosticators also think, that such things which are not ordinary, and but seldom seen, be not natural, but miraculously sent by the Gods to prognosticate something.
Id. Ib. p. 20.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go:
I neither will, nor can prognosticate
To the young gaping heir, his father's fate.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

This town, under the appellation of Fæsutæ, was one of the twelve Etrurian cities, and seems to have been distinguished above the others by its skill in the interpretation of omens and prognostics.—Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 10.

Hippocrates's prognostick is generally true, that it is very hard to resolve a small apoplexy, and quite impossible to resolve a great one.—Arbutnot. On Diet, c. 3.

On this last prognostick, instead of entering into the grounds of this apprehension, in order by a proper foresight, to prevent the prognosticated evil, Mr. Necker receives a sort of friendly reprimand from the president of the assembly.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

The consequences are before us; not in remote history;
not in future prognostication: they are about us; they are

Shakespeare and Milton use the verb; and it is lately revived.

Nay, quod Delite, loue is a vertue clere,
And from the soule his progresse holdeth he.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

The species of things and progressions,
Shall endure by successions
And not eterne.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3015.

If we purpose to enjoy Asia, and not to make a progresse through it, wee must make them partakers of oure clemency: and then their fidelitie shall make oure empire stable and perpetual.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 230.

They were with their long and tedious iourney wried

Let me wipe off this honourable dewe,
That siluerly doth progresse on thy cheekes.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act v. sc. 2.

In supereminence of beatific vision, progressing the date-less and irrevoluble circle of eternity, they shall clasp inseparable hands with joy and bliss in over-measure for ever.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

So forth they both yfere make their progresse,
And march, not past the mountenaunce of a shott,
Till they arriv'd whereas their purpose they did plott.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

This being supposed, as being most evident, we can easily proceed by wonderful degrees and steps of progression in the oeconomy of this divine philosophy.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

It is the heaviest stone that melancholy can throw at a man, to tell him he is at the end of his nature; or that there is no further state to come, unto which this seemes progressional, and otherwise made in vain.
Brown. Urne Buriall, c. 4.

Growth is progress; and all progress designs and tends to the acquisition of something which the growing person is not yet possessed of.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

Nothing that adequately fills a place can move in that place, unless it moves circularly, but progressively or in a direct line it is impossible.—Id. ib. vol. vii. Ser. 1.

While we are curious in tracing the progress of barbarism, we wonder more that any arts existed, than that they attained no degree of perfection.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

Men grew wiser by the follies of those who went before them; and a different method of studying nature was invented and pursued; in which Fancy was excluded, and Fact only allowed for a solid ground of physical progression.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

At first progressive as a stream, they [the sheep] seek The middle field; but, scatter'd by degrees, Each to his choice, soon whiten all the land.

Cowper. Task, b. i.

Lost and confus'd progressively they fade, Not fall precipitate from light to shade.

And [the Britons] following after with all the rest of their power, prohibited our men to take land.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 99.

The Athenians thought it a miserable sight, and therefore they opened their gates for the refuge of such as escaped by flying, contrary to the king's prohibition.

Id. Justine, fol. 52.

Do not thou then incessantly complain,
Best doth the mean besit the wise in mourning:
And to recall that, labour not in vain,
Which is by fate prohibited returning.

Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 7.

Of God it cannot be; where hath he given warrant to any such practise? where any promise to concur with it? Nay, how oft hath he testified his prohibitions and detestation of these courses.—Bp. Hall. Of the Evil Angels, s. 8.

A prohibition will lie on this statute, notwithstanding the penalty annexed; because it has words prohibitory, as well as a penalty annexed.—Ayliffe. Pargon.

Mortification and austerity of life were (in shew at least) equally advanced, and Satan began to play the white devil, by prohibiting, upon pretence of higher sacerdotal purity, the marriage of the clergy, (though at the same time reckoned by themselves a sacrament,) forbidding also certain sorts of meat, and enjoining others.—South, vol. v. Ser. 3.

But God's "thoughts are not our thoughts;" he has been pleased to enter an express caveat and prohibition in the case; and has, no doubt, good reason for it.

Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 166.

The precept (thou shalt have no other Gods before me,) as most of the rest, is in form negative, and prohibitive, but supposeth and implieth somewhat affirmative and positive; as the rest also may be conceived to do.

Barrow. An Exposition of the Decalogue.

To this day, in France, the exportation of corn is almost always prohibited, in order, as they say, to prevent famines; though it is evident that nothing contributes more to the frequent famines which so much distress that fertile country.

Hume, pt. ii. Ess. 5.

It is of the nature and essence of law, to have penal sanctions. Without them, all laws are vain; especially prohibitory laws.

Warburton. Julian's Attempt to rebuild the Temple, b. ii. c. 4.

We have been obliged to guard it from foreign competition by very strict prohibitory laws.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act v. sc. 2.

What sit we then projecting peace and warr?
Warr hath determin'd us, and foil'd with loss Irreparable. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— And in my ear

Vented much policy, and projects deep
Of enemies, of aids, battels, and leagues,
Plausible to the world, to me worth naught.

Id. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

It is commonly seen, that worldly-minded men are more subtle in the contriving of their affairs to their own advantage, than God's children are in the projecting and managing of better businesses.—Bp. Hall. Hard Texts. Luke, xvi. 8.

— Since affection

In judgment may, as shadow and projection
In landscape, make that which is low seem high,
That's shallow deep, small great, and far that's nigh.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

Whiche of a weake and niggardly projection
Doth like a miser spoyle his coat, with scanting
A little cloth.

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act ii. sc. 4.

Thwack. You shall, if my projections thrive, in less, Sir, than a year, stable your horses in PROLEPTICK. } An anticipation; or, (as Cotgrave well says,) "A natural foreknowledge conceived in the mind; and, hence, a figure whereby we prevent and avoid that which another intends to allege against us." And see the first quotation from Scott.

Proleptick is common in medical books.

We have evinced, that the generality of mankind have constantly had a certain prolepsis or anticipation in their minds, concerning the actual existence of a God, according to the true idea of him.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 11. To the Reader.

But this, it is evident, he spake by way of prolepsis or anticipation, a very usual scheme of speech in Scripture, which is to express things of certain futurity, as if they were actually existing.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

So that our knowledge here is not after singular bodies, or secondarily or derivatively from them; but in order of nature, before them, and proleptical to them.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 732.

When he had told his disciples in that proleptical speech after his resurrection, that all power was given him in heaven and earth, it immediately follows, Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, &c.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Knowledge and understanding apprehend things proleptically to their existence.—Cudworth. Intel. System, p. 733.

PROLIFICK. } Fr. Prolifique; It. and Sp.
PROLIFICAL. } Prolifico, formed from the PROLIFICA'TION. } Lat. Proles and facere, to make, to produce—offspring.

Productive, fertile, fruitful; bearing or breeding fruitfully or plentifully.

Proletary, (Lat. Proletarius,)—those who contributed to the strength of the republick by their offspring (prole) only; and thus, poor, plebeian, vulgar.

For than vpon Astronomie
Of due constellation
Thou makest prolification,
And dost that children ben begete.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Indeed it is usual in Scripture, that covetousness being so universal, so original a crime, such a proliffick sin, be called by all the names of those sins by which it is either punished, or to which it tempts, or whereby it is nourished.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 23.

To make man there are many acts must precede, first a meeting and copulation of the sexes, then conception, which requires a well disposed womb to retain the proliffick seed, by the constriction and occlusion of the orifice of the matrix.

Howell. Letters, b. i. s. 3.

Their fruits [plants] proceeding from simpler roots, are not so unlike, or distinguishable from each other, as are the off-springs of sensible creatures and prolifications descending from double originals.—Brown. Vulgar Err. b. ii. c. 12.

Of 15000 proletaries slain in a battel, scarce fifteen are recorded in history, and after awhile their names are likewise blotted out, the whole battel it self is forgotten.

Burton. Anat. of Mel. Democritus to the Reader, p. 33.

The soil untill'd a ready harvest yields,
With wheat and barley wave the golden fields,
Spontaneous wines from weighty clusters pour,
And Jove descends in each proliffick shower.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

We like speculators should foresee,
From Pharos of authority, Portended mischiefs farther than Low proletarian tything-men.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

This benevolence, the ricketty offspring of weakness, was to be supported by another resource, the twin brother of the same proliffick imbecility.—Burke. French Revolution.

Long, prolonged or lengthened out, continued long; tedious, tiresome, wearisome.

But file we now prolixitie best is.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

Then he beganne to moue vnto the French kyng and hys nobles, with a longe and prolix exhortacion to make and conclude a perpetuall peace.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 5.

We shall not be more prolix, but refer the substantial, perfect, and assured handling hereof to your circumspections, fidelities, and diligences.—Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii.

Who for the way the army was to pass,
That by th' Egyptians only was intended,
Most part by water, more prolixious was
Than present peril any whit commended.

Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. i.

Lay by all nicetie, and prolixious blushes
That banish what they sue for.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 4.

And (idly running on with vain prolixity)
A larger subject took than it was fit they should.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

Thus I have done with France, and shall recompence any prolixity in it, with greater brevity in other kingdoms, when I have overpassed Spain.

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, p. 51. App.

On these, prolixly thankful, she enlarg'd;
Then with acknowledgement herself she charg'd.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. iii.

I have been purposely prolix in this demonstration, to shew how it begins in experiment, goes on by experiment, and ends in an experimental conclusion.

Beddoes. On Mathematical Evidence, p. 24.

Pursu'd prolixly, even the gentlest toil
Is waste of health.

Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health, b. iii.

PROLOCUTOR. Lat. Proloquutor, (pro, and loqui.)

The speaker.

The reuerend bishop Cedda was appointed prolocutor for both parties in that parlement.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 111. an. 643.

In the next place, Buchanan was once prolocutor of the Scotch assembly, that is to say, something greater than their king.—South, vol. v. Ser. 5.

PROLOGUE, n. } Fr. Prologue, (or fore-PROLOGUE, v. } speech, — Cotgrave;) It.
PROLOGIZE, v. } and Sp. Prologo; Lat. Pro- PROLOGUISER, n. } logus; Gr. Προλογος, (προ, PROLONG, v. } Fr. Prolonger; It. Pro-

PROLONGER, } lungare; Sp. Prolongar; Lat.
PROLONGING, n. } Prolangare, (pro, and lon- PROLONGATION, } gus.) to draw forward in length.

To lengthen out, or extend, or stretch forward in length; to produce, to protract; to continue; to linger, to delay, to retard, to procrastinate.

My father, whom I hoped to conuey
To the next hills, and did him thearto treat, Refused either to prolong his life,
Or bide exile after the fall of Troy.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

But at length the same feare that made him holde his peace prycked him forwardes to speake, least the prolongyng of the kynges expectatiō might prouoke him to further wrath.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 196.

— For what art thou,

That mak'st thyselfe his dayes-man to prolong
The vengeance prest?—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

And so shadowed with this counsaile, wythout long argument or prolonging of time, he toke a determinate peace, and a final conclusion vpon these conditions.

Grafton. Hen. VI. an. 13.

The story says, the same candle was burning six months after: an example of the most miraculous prolonger that ever I met withal!—More. Antidote against Idolatry, c. 8.

By this, the sun, declining from his height,
The day had shorten'd to prolong the night:
The lengthen'd night gave length of misery
Both to the captive lover and the free.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

To what purpose should I take pains for a livelihood, or so much as be at the trouble of putting meat to my mouth for the prolongation of my life?—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

Now this joint is strengthened, i. e. is defended from dis-location, by two remarkable processes or prolongations of the bones of the leg, which processes form the protuberances that we call the inner and outer ankle.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

PROLUSION. Lat. Prolusio, from proludere.
See PRELUDE.

A prelude; a trial before the principal performance; and hence, generally, a trial, an essay.

Our Saviour having mentioned the beginnings of sorrows, αρχας ωδινων, beginnings of their throes of travail, and prolusions of this so bloody day, [Jerusalem encompassed with armies, &c.] concludes in the words of this text, Matt.
iii. 2.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 490.

Very different was its condition when described by Strada, who lays the scene of two of his prolusions in its gardens.

Eustace. Italy, vol. ii. c. 7.

PROMANATION. See EMANATION. From the Lat. Pro, and manare, to flow or issue.

An efflux, effluence, or issuing forth.

Besides, considering the promanation and intertexture of the rayes of light, that which is said thereof is more eminently and perfectly true in the nature of every particular spirit (as I have elsewhere shown at large) then in light itself.—More. Def. of the Philosophical Cabbala, c. 8. App.

PROMENADE. Fr. Pourmener, promener, (pour, and mener, to move,) to walk.

This little intermixture of a garden plot or patern, set both with the flowers of nature and the fruits of grace, may be no unpleasant walk or promenade for the unconfined portion of some solitary prisoner.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 6.

They told him to think no more of the matter, and to try his fortune in another promenade.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

PROMERIT, v. Lat. Promesitus, past part. of promereri, (pro, and mereri, to earn a share or part, Gr. Μερος.)

To earn, to deserve, to gain by service; also (as in Hall) to bestow or confer a favour before or in preference to others.

He loves not God; no, not while he promerits him with his favours.—Bp. Hall. Ser. James, iv. 8.

Were we a people, that God had no whit promerited by his favours, that he had done nothing for us more than for the savage nations of the world, surely the God of heaven had not taken it so deeply to heart.—Id. Ser. 37. Eph. iv. 30.

There is nothing in ourselves, which can effect or deserve it [salvation] for us, nothing in any other creature which can promerit or procure it to us.

Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 2.

PROMINENT. } Fr. Prominent; It. Pro-
PROMINENCE. } minente; Lat. Prominens, PROMINENCY. } pres. part. of prominere, to stand forwards, (pro, and manere; Gr. Μεν-ειν, to stay or stand.) See EMINENT.

Standing forwards; projecting, jutting, or shooting forwards; stretching forth; (met.) conspicuous.

Wherefore that prominent great horne of the gote in his most strength broken of, signifyeth the mighty power of great Alexander smytten downe in his chief flowers.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 8.

— It shew'd, as when you view

An angler, from some prominent rocke, draw with his line and hooke

A mightie fish out of the sea.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

[The winds asleepe] he freely pours, till highest promi-

nents,

Hill tops, low meddows, and the fields, that crowne with most contents

The toiles of men: sea-ports, and shores are hid.

Id. Ib. b. xii.

It contained no less then sixty foot in length, the head somewhat peculiar, with a large prominency over the mouth.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 26.

So vigorous are his eyes, such rays they cast,

So prominent his eagle's beak is plac'd.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

— There, closely brac'd

And neatly fitted, it compresses hard

The prominent and most unsightly bones,

And binds the shoulders flat.—Couper. Task, b. ii.

The rock itself is broken into numberless pinnacles, insulated prominencies, and fantastic forms.

Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 11.

PROMISCUOUS. } Fr. Promiscue; Lat.
PROMISCUOUSLY. } Promiscuus, (pro, and miscere.) mixed together.

Mixed or mingled; confused, disorderly; indiscriminate.

Say, Muse, thir names then known, who first, who last,

Rous'd from the slumber, on that fiery couch,

At thir great emperor's call, as next in worth,

Came singly where he stood on the bare strand,

While the promiscuous croud stood yet aloof?

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

When gracious and gracelesse persons shall sit promis- cuously together in a play-house, beholding some prophane lascivious enterlude with delight; not onely God himselfe, but euen saints and angels frowne upon them, as a frater-nitie of evill doers.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iv. sc. 2.

Whether, as Pliny and divers since affirm, that elephants are terrified, and make away upon the grunting of swine, Garcias ab Horto may decide, who affirmeth upon experience, they enter their stalls, and live promiscuously in the woods of Malavar.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 1.

He who, with a promiscuous undistinguishing profuseness does not so much dispence as throw away what he has, proclaims himself a fool to all the intelligent world about him.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

Though many a common term and word we find

Dispers'd promiscuously through every kind,

Those that will never suit th' heroic rage,

Might grace the buskin, and become the stage.

Pitt. Vida. Art of Poetry, b. iii.

PROMISE, v. } Fr. Promettre; It. Pro-
PROMISE. } mettere; Sp. Prometer; Lat.
PROMISER. } Promittere, (pro and mittere.)

PROMISORILY. } mittens aliquid in verbis, (Martinus.) Qui pollicentur, verbis aliquem in longum mittant, ut qui non tam faciant, quam aliquando, se facturos recipiant; they undertake or pledge themselves that they will do something at a future time, (Vossius.)

To undertake or pledge, or engage that something shall be done; to assure or give assurance.

The common word in Wiclif is belight.

The land of promise,—land of biheest.

And in this wise thei be lad,

Till thei toke in possession

The londes of promission. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And this is the promise that he hath promised vs euen eternal life.—Bible, 1551. John, c. 2.

He was a subtile deceiuer, a fayer false promiser.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 11.

But (as the common prouerbe saith) he, whiche is a promise breaker, escapeth not alwaye free.

Hall. Hen. VI. an. 14.

Christian simplicity relates to promises and acts of grace and favour; and its caution is, that all promises be simple, ingenuous, agreeable to the intention of the promiser, truly and effectually expressed, and never going less in the performance than in the promises and words of the expression.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 23. pt. ii.

Your young Prince Mamillius: it is a gentleman of the greatest promise, that euer came into my note.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 1.

— I endur'd one last night

Thou canst not cure this morning; a strange promiser.

B. Jonson. The Widow, Act iv. sc. 2.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which is most exquisitely adapted to the same end.

Decay of Christian Piety.

Nor was he obliged by oath unto a strict observation of that which promissorily was unlawful; or could he be qualified by vow to commit a fact which naturally was abominable.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 14.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, by the laws of most countries, prescribe sooner than bonds, and mortgages, and contracts of a more formal nature.

Hume. Principles of Morals, s. 3.

Christ, when he put an end to the covenant of the law, brought both Jews and Gentiles into one and the same new covenant; and gave to both the same promises, and the same means, and the same hopes of salvation.

Sharp, vol. 5. Dis. 3.

Temures promised the garrison of Sebastia, that, if they would surrender, no blood should be shed. The garrison surrendered; and Temures buried them all alive.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. iii. c. 5.

Where the terms of promise admit of more senses than one, the promise is to be performed "in that sense in which the promiser apprehended at the time that the promisee received it."—Id. Ib.

PROMONT. } Fr. Promontoire; It. and Sp.
PROMONTORY. } Promontorio; Lat. Promonto- rium, (pro monte.) a rock or other thing standing out like a mountain. Applied to high or elevated land, projecting or reaching out, (sc.) into the sea.

And so firste by mocion of the holy ghoste, Barnabas and Saul went to Seleucia, which is a great promontorie, or peake, on the west parte of Antioche, and thence thei sailed vnto Cypres.—Udal. Actes of the Apostles, c. 13.

The shore let her transcend, the promont to descry,
And view about the point th' unnumber'd fowl that fly.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

Thus from the lofty promontory's brow
A swain surveys the gathering storm below.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

As we passed the bay of Misenus we observed the fine appearance of that promontory; it is separated by the harbour, and by Maremorto, with the flat shore beyond, from the neck of land which it terminates, and thus it forms an insulated eminence remarkable for its shape, its boldness, and its aerial elevation.—Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 1.

PROMOVE, v. } Fr. Promouvoir, promotion; It. Promovere, promozione; Sp. Promover; Lat. Promovere, promotum; to move forward, (pro, and move.)

To move or put forward, to forward, to prefer, to advance.

Promoter, (in old writers.)—mover, inciter, inciter to mischief, to strife or contention, informer.

Loke ye therefore of Daniel's cōstancye, his faith and temperance, and followe it, if ye will with Daniel be godly promoued.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 1.

This place cōteyneth two sermons, the one of the godly quene, & the tother of the ongodly kynge vnto Daniel, by whom Daniel in the mutacion of the kyngdom is promoued.
Id. Ib. c. 5.

For bokis & heresies as they call goddis worde, be prohibited, pressed downe, & burned with all the promouers therof.—Id. Ib. c. 7.

The duke of Yorke, both for birth and courage, was worthy of this honour and preferment, yet he was disdayned of Edmonde Duke of Somerset beyng cosyn to the king, that he was promoted to so high an office.
Grafton. Hen. VI. an. 14.

Many thought it better, that ye erle shulde rather preferre the amyte of the kyng of Englonde, thā of the kyng of Fraunce: of whiche oppynyon was a great furtherer or promoter, a knyght of Flaunders called Countrysse.
Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1337.

Thou askeddest of me a spiritual promotion, and furthwith I gaue it the, before many other, whose parentes hadde serued me in warres.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 7.

The king endeuoured by al the meanes he coulde, to pacify Pausanias (being kindled with most iust cause of griefe) as well by geeuing hym great giftes & promociōns, as placynge hym honourably emongest those gētlemen that were for the garde of his parsonne.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 9.

There never yet was honest man
That ever drove the trade of love;
It is impossible, nor can Integrity our ends promove.
Suckling. Loving & Beloved.

— All my mind was set Serious to learn and know, and thence to do
What might be publick good; myself I thought Born to that end, born to promote all truth,
All righteous things. Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Know'st thou not that my rising is thy fall,
And my promotion will be thy destruction.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

Besides a desire of superiority there is also a desire of greatness, (for I know no other name to give it,) which is equally pre-dominant in men, and equally served and promoted by fame and honour.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 1.

That great and learned promoter of experimental philosophy, Dr. Wilkins, [did] me the honour to come himself, and bring some of his inquisitive friends to my lodging.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 44.

The government is elective; promotion depends in a great degree upon talents and virtues, and consequently there is a stimulus to exertion, and a scope for honourable ambition.—Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 6.

PROMPT, v. } Fr. Prompt; It. and Sp. Pronto; Lat. Promptus, from promere; Lat. Promptus, from promere, to bring forward or forth, (pro, and mere, i. e. sumere.) Prompt, adj.—
Brought forth, set forth, prepared, ready; ready for use, ready for action, quick; sharp.

To prompt,—to prepare or make ready; to quicken, to urge on; to give readiness or facility to; to quicken or help on, (sc.) the memory or recollection; to call or bring to mind, to remind, to remember.

Daring to act what I am prompted to,
I might thrust out into the world again,
Full-blossom'd, with a sweet and golden spring.
Cook. Green's Tu Quoque.

To thee sage Hermegild myself I leave
My fame and pow'r: thee action cannot waste;
Caution retard, nor promptitude deceive;
Slowness belate, nor hope drive on too faste.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 2.

This started him from sleep; though deepe and deare,
And passing promptlie, he enjoy'd his care.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Venus.

But 'tis ourselves that give this frailty sway,
By our own promptness to obey
Our lust, pride, envy, avarice.
Cotton. Contentment. A Pindaric Ode.

— Ile to my brother,
Though he hath false by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a minde of honour,
That had he twentie heads to tender downe
On twentie bloodie blockes, hee'd yeeld them vp,
Before his sister should her bodie stoope
To such abhor'd pollution.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 4.

Distracting thoughts by turns his bosom rul'd,
Now fir'd by wrath, and now by reason cool'd:
That prompts his hand to draw the deadly sword,
Force through the Greeks, and pierce their haughty lord.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

And why should the common word be, that the devil stands at the lyar's elbow, if he were not to be his prompter.
South, vol. v. Ser. 3.

His [Dr. Bates] judicious memory, being a copious promptuary, of what was profitable, facetious, and disdaining to be the receptacle of useless truth.—Howe. Funeral Sermon.

Sometimes too, while absorpt in meditation, the swell of the distant organ and the voices of the choir far below may steal upon his ear, and prompt the song of praise.
Eustace. Italy, vol. iii. c. 10.

When we reason from analogies, the man who has the greater experience or the greater promptitude of suggesting analogies, will be the better reasoner.
Hume. On the Understanding, s. 9. Note H.

I rather think this curious fragment of antiquity was only the remains of a promptuary for the use of the comic poet, from whence he might be supplied with his materials, the simple passions; in order to blend, and shade, and work them into his pictures of real life and manners.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 6.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 475. an. 1400.

By which he thought to have ended all this controversie, but because they were promulged onely by the king's own edict, not by the whole Parliament as binding lawes, they still proceeded in the Union.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iii. p. 147.

Which albeit I know he nothing so much hateth, as to promulgate, yet thus much have I adventured upon his friendship, himselfe being for long time farre estraunged.
Spenser. Epistle to Maister Harvey.

And that this was so, will appear from a consideration of the state and condition the world was in, as to religion, when Christ promulged his doctrine.—South, vol. i. Ser. 6.

Nay, in the promulgation of the Mosaic law, if so much as a brute beast touch'd the mountain, the bow of vengeance was ready.—South, vol. i. Ser. 7.

The ten commandments themselves, as they were delivered by Moses, tho' we confess they do oblige us, yet they do not oblige us at all by virtue of that promulgation, but upon other accounts.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

How groundless a calumny this is, appears from the sanctity of the Christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; as also from the designments and aims of its first promulgators.—Decay of Christian Piety.

He believes the Christian religion true, because the great author and promulger of it died, and rose again from the dead, according to the Scriptures.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 8.

A thunder much more dreadful than all those that sounded in their ears at the promulging of the law from Mount Sinai: for if the terror of the Almighty was so great in giving the law, no wonder if it was much greater in pronouncing the curse.—Id. Ib. Ser. 2.

The Roman consuls, for some time, decided all causes, without being confined by any positive statutes, till the people, bearing this yoke with impatience, created the decemvirs, who promulgated the twelve tables.
Hume, pt. i. Ess. 14.

An absurd theory on one side of a question, forms no justification for alleging a false fact, or promulgating mischievous maxims on the other.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

Drayton. The Legend of Matilda the Fair.

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputie: bid herselfe assay him,
I have great hope in that: for in her youth
There is a prone and speechlesse dialect,
Such as moue men.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 3.

And then the soul, being first from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall;
And this declining proneness unto nought,
Is e'en that sin that we are born withal.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 7.

Of this mechanick prony, I do not see any good tendency.—More. Divine Dialogues.

Christians should macerate themselves on that day with fasting, in sorrowful remembrance of their prony to the vices aforenamed.—Fuller. General Worthies, c. 8.

Gr. Παγω, Doric, pro πηγω, whence πηγνυμι, seu πηγνυμι, to fix.)

In the ways or methods of propagating trees described by Pliny, one is, when the twigs or branches are fixed in the earth, or earth fixed round the branches; these branches, when rooted, are severed from the parent stock, and thus the tree multiplied or increased. Thus, to propagate is—

To increase, to multiply, (sc.) the kind, the breed; to breed, to generate; generally, to increase, to spread.

I first upon the mountains high built altars to thy name,
And grav'd it on the rocks thereby to propagate thy fame.—Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

This practise, therefore, of acting vices, doth onely propagate them, not restrain them.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 3.

Poet. Sir, I have vpon a high and pleasant hill Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd. The base o' the mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinde of natures
That labour on the bosome of this sphere,
To propagate their states.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act i. sc. 1.

Recount the number of the wooers then;
And let me know what name they hold with men:
That my minde may cast ouer their estates
A curious measure; and conferre the rates
Of our two pow'rs, and theirs; to try, if we Alone may propagate to victory
Our bold encounters of them all, or proue
The kind assistance of some other's loue.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

— No need that thou Shouldst propagat, already infinite;
And through all numbers absolute, though one.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

— This we came not to,
Onely for propagation of a dowre
Remaining in the coffer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our loue
Till time had made them for vs.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 3.

The worke of nature, in sending out these sprigs, taught us the feat to couch and lay sets in the ground, by way of propagation. Now, their be two waies to encrease trees by way of propagation.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 13.

It was the singular and miraculous blessing of the gospel in the hands of the first propagators of it, that there was no speech nor language where their voice was not heard.

Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, pt. i. s. 13.

Such creatures as are produced each by its peculiar seed, constitute a distinct propagable sort of creatures.—Boyle.

Afric and India shall his power obey;
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

He [Pythagoras] was the chief propagator of that doctrine amongst the Greeks, concerning three hypostases in the Deity.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 22.

Me from attempting. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Sam. Spare that proposal, father, spare the trouble
Of that solicitation. Id. Samson Agonistes.

Some deny the infallibility of the present church; and only make the tradition of all ages the infallible propounder.
Chillingworth. The Answer to the Preface, p. 17.

And such impediment I will make out by lawful proofs to be transmitted by the foresaid messenger to the cardinal proponent of the Holy Roman Church in the congregation of the Sacred Council.—Barrow. Pope's Supremacy, Intro.

It is disputed, I know, in natural philosophy, whether the sense being duly qualify'd, and the object as duly proposed, and the medium fitted to both, the sense can be deceived in the apprehension of its object; and it is generally held in the negative.—South. vol. v. Ser. 4.

Now there could be no satisfactory confutation of this atheistic hypothesis, without a fair proposal first made of the several grounds of it, to their best advantage.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 175.

Q. May a man, wilfully dying a Roman-catholic, be saved?
A. What the proposer means by wilfully dying a Roman-catholic, I know not.—Sharp. vol. vii. App.

Logicians use to clap a proposition,
As justices do criminals, in prison,
And, in as learn'd authentic nonsense, writ
The names of all their moods and figures fit.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

If a proposition ascribing the nature of things has an indefinite subject, it is generally to be esteemed universal, in its propositional sense. If it has a singular subject, in its propositional sense it is, always ranked with universals.
Watts. Logick, pt. ii. c. 2. § 1.

He [Nicholas Briot] was the inventor, or at least one of the first proposers of coining money by a press, instead of the former manner of hammering.

Most writers agree, that Porus was four cubits and a shaft's length high, and that being upon an elephant's back, he wanted nothing in height and bigness to be proportionable for his mounture, albeit it were a very great elephant.—North. Plutarch, p. 584.

The ground of all pleasure is agreement and proportionableness to the temper and constitution of any thing.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 479.

Whence it should come expressively direct,
Holding just distance to the lineament,
And should the beams proportionably project.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

Nor yet on him found deadly, yet he lives,
Lives, as thou saidst, and gaires to live as man Higher degree of life, inducement strong
To us, as likely tasting to attaine Proportional ascent, which cannot be
But to be gods, or angels, demi-gods.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

All sense, so far as grateful, dependeth upon the equality or the proportionality of the motion or impression which is made.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 2. s. 5.

And if they found him fair, and well proportionated of all his limbs and strong, they gaue order he should be brought up, and appointed him one of the nine thousand parts of inheritance for his education.—North. Plutarch, p. 41.

It is wished that the poetical monks in celebration of him, [Arthur,] and other such worthies, had contained themselves within bounds of likelihood; or else that some judges, proportionate to those of the Grecian games, (who always by public authority pulled down the statues erected if they exceeded the true symmetry of the victors) had given such exorbitant fictions their desert.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3. Selden. Illustrations.

To this internal perfection is added a proportionately happy condition.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 12.

By this adaptation and congruity of those faculties to their several proper objects, and by the fitness and proportionateness of these objective impressions, qualities, or motions, upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the sensible nature hath so much of perception and reception of things as is necessary for its sensible being.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 2.

Then all the train, who gather'd round the grave,
Each for his rank proportion'd treasures gave.
Pitt. Virgil. Aeneid, b. v.

If hee did not [auoid the countrie] within fiftene dayes the rebell was to stand proscribed, and put out of protection.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 162.

A poetaster, in his raging fit,
(Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys)
Is dreaded and proscrib'd by men of sense.

Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

The triumvir and proscriber had descended to us in a more hideous form than they now appear, if the Emperour had not taken care to make friends of him and Horace.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

In Sylla's bloody proscription, matters came to that pass in Rome, that if a man had but a fair garden, a rich jewel, or but a ring of value, it was enough to get his name posted up in the cut-throat roll, and to cost him his life, for having any thing worth the taking from him.

South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

But they [plays] have been zealously proscribed by the godly in later ages; and the play-house, according to a learned divine, is the porch of hell.

Hume. Essays, vol. ii. p. 490. Notes.

He told the people from the rostrum, "he had now proscribed all that he remembered; and such as he had forgot, must come into some future 'proscription.'"

Langhorne. Plutarch, vol. iii. Sylla.

Our constitution is not made for great, general, and proscriptive exclusions; sooner or later it will destroy them, or they will destroy the constitution.

Men on all hands almost keep their own proselites by affrighting them with the fearful sermons of damnation: but in the mean time here is no security to them that are not able to judge for themselves, and no peace for them that are.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

Spiritual proselitism, to which the Jew was wont to be wash'd, as the Christian is baptized, and both to take upon them new names, new kindreds and relations, as if they had entred into the mother's womb again, and come out in new families, new countries, born neither of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 500.

The same Josephus afterwards, in his twelfth book, brings in Aristæus (who seems to have been a secret proselited Greek) pleading with Ptolemæus Philadelphus, in behalf of the Jews and their liberty.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 467.

Our Saviour found, when he came into the world, that his countrymen the Jews had used that ceremony of baptism many ages, for the admission of proselites into the true religion.—Sharp, vol. v. Dis. 7.

The Gentoo religion has a principle peculiar to itself; it admits of no proselites.

Mickle. Inquiry into the Bramin Philosophy.

If his grace be one of these whom they endeavour to proselitize, he ought to be aware of the character of the sect whose doctrines he is invited to embrace.

Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

PROSEMINATION. Lat. Proseminare, to sow.

We are not, therefore, presently to conclude every vegetable sponte natum, because we see not its prosemination.
Hale. The Origin. of Mankind, p. 268.

PROSODIST. }

Prosody and orthography are not parts of grammar, but diffused like the blood and spirits through the whole.

B. Jonson. English Grammar, c. 1.

That the forbidden fruit of paradise was an apple, is commonly believed, confirmed by tradition, perpetuated by writings, verses, pictures; and some have been so bad prosodians, as from thence to derive the Latine word malum, because that fruit was the first occasion of evil.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 1.

This [Phantasia Macaronica] is a burlesque Latin poem, in heroic metre, chequered with Italian and Tuscan words, and those of the plebeian character, yet not destitute of prosodical harmony.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 356.

Here are the swiftness of the rapid race, and the march of slow-paced majesty, exhibited by the same poet in the same sequence of syllables, except that the exact prosodist will find the line of swiftness by one time longer than that of tardiness.—Johnson. Life of Pope.

PRO/SOPOLEPSIE. Gr. Προσωποληψία, personæ acceptio, respectus; pros, ωψ, and ληψις, from ληψ-εσθαι, to take.

Regard or favour to personal appearance; personal partiality.

There can be no reason given, why there might not be as well other ranks and orders of souls superiour to those of men, without the injustice of prosopolepsie.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 567.

PROSOPOPEIA. Fr. Prosopopée; It. Prosopopea; Sp. Prosopopeia; Lat. Prosopopeia; Gr. Προσωποποιία, pros, ωψ, ποιε-ειν, προσωπον ποιειν, to make, frame, or feign, a person.

Of the prosopopeia, or personification there are two kinds, one, when action and character are attributed to fictitious, irrational, or even inanimate objects; the other, when a probable but fictitious speech is assigned to a real character.
Lowth. Lectures. Gregory, vol. i.

Prospective, — the view before us, in space or time; the sight, the scene before us, (as we turn; and hence,) the scene around us.

They speke of Alhazen and Vitellon,
And Aristotle, that written in hir lives
Of queinte mirrours, and of prospectives.
Chaucer. The Squire's Tale, v. 10,547.

And the streets were hanged on both sides with blew cloth, which, together with the foresayd banners, yeelded a very stately and gallant prospect.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 605.

Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
If cottage were in view, sheep-cote or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheep-cote none he saw.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Men, standing according to the prospective of their own humour, seem to see the self same things to appear otherwise to them, than either they do to other, or are indeed in themselves.—Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

Howsoever, the whole scene of affairs was changed from Spain to France, there now lay the prospective.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 219.

For once it was my dismal hap to hear
A sybil old, bow-bent with crooked age,
That far events full wisely could presage,
And in time's long and dark prospective glass
Foresaw what future days should bring to pass.
Milton. Vacation Exercise.

Heavens! what a goodly prospect spreads around,
Of hills, and dales, and woods, and lawns, and spires,
And glittering towns, and gilded streams, till all
The stretching landscape into smoke decays!
Thomson. Summer.

What does all this prove, but that the prospection, which must be somewhere, is not in the animal, but in the Creator!
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

Prosperity is but a bad nurse to virtue; a nurse which is like to starve it in its infancy, and to spoil it in its growth.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

There the vain youth who made the world his prize,
That prosperous robber, Alexander, lies.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

Amongst men, those who are prosperously unjust, are entitled to panegyric; but afflicted virtue is insolently stabbed with all manner of reproaches.
Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Why, we are willing to trust God for our livelihood, so long as we have something to live on: we are willing to trust God with any other, so long as that concern goes on prosperously.—Sharp, vol. v. Ser. 4.

Id. Passionate Pilgrim.

With good cause therefore, it is the general consent of all sound protestant writers, that neither traditions, councils, nor canons of any visible church, much less edicts of any magistrate or civil session, but the Scripture only, can be the final judge or rule in matters of religion, and that only in the conscience of every Christian to himself. Which protestation made by the first public reformers of our religion against the imperial edicts of Charles the fifth imposing church-traditions without Scripture, gave first beginning to the name of Protestant; and with that name hath ever been receiv'd this doctrine, which prefers the Scripture before the Church, and acknowledges none but the Scripture sole interpreter of itself to the conscience.

Milton. Of Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

To Protestants therefore, whose common rule and touchstone is the Scripture, nothing can with more conscience, more equity, nothing more protestantly can be permitted, than a free and lawful debate at all times by writing, conference, or disputation of what opinion soever, disputable by Scripture.—Id. Id.

This contention is yet grown to be more intricate, by reason of a third kind of gospellers called Brownists: who, being directed by the great fervour of the unholy ghost, do expressly affirm, that the protestantical church of England is not gathered in the name of Christ, but of Antichrist.

Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

We find the good shall dwell within thy court.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

To the same purpose is it also, when he compareth the Father and the Son to the water and the vapour arising from it; to the light and the splendour; to the prototype and the image.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 616.

He and his favourite, Charles Brandon, were the prototypes of those illustrious heroes with which Mademoiselle Scuderi has enriched the world of chivalry.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

PROTRACT, v. } It. Protrarre, protratto; PROTRACT, n. } Lat. Protrahere, protractum, to draw forward or PROTRACTING, n. } forth; (pro, and trahere, PROTRACTIVE. } i. e. trahere, trans, vehere, to carry over.)

To draw or drag forward or forth; and, consequentially, to lengthen or prolong; to lengthen the duration or continuance, and, thus, to postpone or put off the end or termination; to delay, to retard.

[The Erle of Marche] determined to set on the kynges army without longer protracting of tyme.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 38.

Whereupon ye shall eftsoons require him, as he will shew himself zealous of our antient fraternal amity, that he will without further protract and dilation of time observe and fulfil his whole promise.

Wyatt. Works. The King (H. VIII.) to Wyatt, an. 1529.

The Gallies were now weary with long protracting of the war.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 32.

[The duke of Bedford] not content with their whisperynges and protractynge of tyme, saied vnto them with an audible voyce.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 3.

And how unfit it were you should protract
Long time, in this so dangerous disgrace?
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

— I fell
From height of goodness in forsaking thee,
And must be punish'd. Why is it delay'd?
Inflict it strait; protraction makes it greater.
Nabbes. Microcosmus, Act v.

— Why then (you princes)
Do you with cheekes abash'd, behold our workes,
And thinke them shame, which are (indeed) nought else
But the protractive trials of great Joue,
To finde persistie constancie in men.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

The long defence the Trojan people made,
The war protracted, and the siege delay'd,
Were due to Hector's and this hero's hand.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xi.

The master smil'd, to see them work in vain,
To wear him out, and make an idle reign:
He saw, but suffer'd their protractive arts,
And strove by mildness to reduce their hearts.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

"Enlarge my life with multitude of days!"
In health, in sickness, thus the suppliant prays:
Hides from himself its state, and shuns to know,
That life protracted is protracted woe.
Johnson. The Vanity of Human Wishes.

The other manager very complaisantly received it again, and had recourse to the old mystery of protraction, which he exercised with such success, that the season was almost consumed before he could afford it a reading.
Smollett. The Regicide, Pref.

PROTRUDE, v. } Lat. Protrudere, protrusion. } sum; to thrust forward, (pro, and trud-ere.) }
To thrust forward or forth, to push forth.

If beholding a candle, we protrude either upward or downward the pupil of one eye, the object will appear double; but if we shut the other eye, and behold it with one, it will then appear but single; and if we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 20.

No, my beloved: this leading of God's spirit must neither be a forced angariation, as if God would feoff grace and salvation upon us against our wills; nor some sudden protrusion to good; nor a mere, actual, momentary, transient conduction.—Bp. Hall. Ser. Romans, viii. 14.

PROTUBERANCY. } a swelling, from tum- PROTUBERATION. } ere, to swell.) PROTUBEROUS. } To swell forward or forth; to project or protrude, as a swelling.

If the navel protuberates, make a small puncture with a lancet through the skin, and the waters will be voided without any danger of a hernia succeeding.—Sharp. Surgery.

Because of the protuberation or bunching out of the parastatae.—Cooke. Desc. of the Body of Man, p. 206. (1615.)

Thus, one man's eyes are more protuberant, and swelling out; another's more sunk and depressed.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

It is very hardly conceivable how the conarion, if it were capable of sense and perception, should, being thus but a mere pulposus protuberant knob, by its nods or jogs drive the animal spirits so curiously.

More. Antidote against Atheism, App. pt. i. c. 10.

Even those rudely scattered mountains, that seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth, if you consider but of what consequence they are, thus reconciled, you may deem them ornaments as well as useful.—Id. Ib. pt. i. b. ii. c. 3.

By dissection you discover this worker of miracles to be nothing but a poor silly contemptible knob or protuberancy, consisting of a thin membrane containing a little pulposus matter, much of the same nature with the rest of the brain.
Id. Ib. pt. i. b. i. c. 11.

The grasshoppers and capers are in their form and fashion, their substance and consistence, clean contrary one to another: the one being protuberous, rough, crusty, and hard; the other round, smooth, spongy, and soft.
Smith. On Old Age, p. 183.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

If on the book itself we cast our view,
Concurrent heathens prove the story true:
The doctrine, miracles; which must convince,
For heaven in them appeals to human sense:
And though they prove not, they confirm the cause,
When what is taught agrees with nature's laws.
Id. Religio Laici.

Then, active still and unrestrain'd, his mind

Thomson. Summer.

And still the nearer to the spring we go
More limpid, more unsoil'd, the waters flow,
Thus first traditions were a proof alone;
Could we be certain such there were, so known.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

Those intervening ideas which serve to show the agreement of any two others, are called proofs; and where the agreement or disagreement is by this means plainly and clearly perceiv'd, it is called demonstration, it being shown to the understanding, and the mind made see that it is so.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 2. s. 3.

I shall not ground my opinion of the pregnant instructiveness of the scripture upon such questionable, not to say altogether proof-less conceits.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 290.

Proofs are either written or parol, that is by word of mouth. Written proofs or evidence, are, 1. Records, and 2. Antient deeds of thirty years standing which prove themselves; but, 3. Modern deeds; and 4. Other writings must be attested and verified by parol evidence of witnesses.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 23.

But to conform our language more to common use, we ought to divide arguments into demonstrations, proofs, and probabilities. By proofs, meaning such arguments from experience as leave no room for doubt or opposition.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 6.

So are slow-worms accounted blind, and the like we affirm proverbially of the beetle; although their eyes be evident, and they will flye against lights, like many other insects.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 18.

The proverb holds, that to be wise and love,
Is hardly granted to the gods above.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

A proverb is usually defined, an instructive sentence, or common and pithy saying, in which more is generally designed than expressed, famous for its peculiarity and elegance, and therefore adapted by the learned as well as the vulgar, by which 'tis distinguished from counterfeits which want such authority.—Ray. Proverbs, Pref.

The wisdom of such ages will necessarily be expressed in the form of fables or parables, or in the still simpler form of proverbial instances; and not in the scientific form of general maxims.—Stewart. The Human Mind, pt. i. c. 4. s. 6.

Give up as nothing worth all Normandy.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

However it were in times of high antiquity, probably it is that in after ages they conformed unto the fashions of the Assyrians and Eastern nations, and lastly of the Romans, being reduced by Pompey unto a provincial subjection.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 6.

When there was a design to provincialize the whole kingdom, Druina, though offered a canton, would not accept of it.—Howell. Voc. For.

Our humbler province is to tend the fair,
Not a less pleasing, though less glorious care.
Pope. Rape of the Lock, c. 2.

Wherever the Roman colonies had long remained, and their language had been generally spoken, the common people used that still, but vitiated with the base alloy of their provincial speech.—Sir W. Temple. On Poetry.

He [Richard Brynckley] is put down there under the year 1527, as being then admitted D. of D. In the said generalship or provincialship he succeeded Dr. Henry Standish.
Wood. Fasti. Oxon. vol. i.

It is true, they had laws to prevent oppression in their provincial magistrates; but Cicero informs us, that the Romans could not better consult the interest of the provinces than by repealing these very laws.
Hume, pt. i. Ess. 3.

Provincial or local words are of three kinds; the first, either Saxon or Danish, in general grown obsolete, from disuse, and the introduction of more fashionable terms.
Grose. Proverbs, Pref. p. iii.

That circumstance must have added greatly to the provinciality, and consequently to the unintelligibility of the poem.
Watson. Rowley. Enquiry, p. 46.

PROVO'KE, v. } Fr. Provoquer; It. Provocare; Sp. Provocar; Lat. Provocare; to call forward or forth, (pro, and vocare), met. — the passions.

PROVO'CATIVE, n. }
PROVO'CABLE. } To call forth, (sc.) to battle or combat; and, hence,—to challenge; to call forth, (the passions,) to raise, rouse, or excite them; to move or urge forwards; to promote; also, as in the Latin,—

To call forth, (sc.) a cause or trial, from one to another judge; and, hence,—to appeal.

Son, what furie hath thus prouoked thee
To such vntamed wrath?—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

They gladly hear also the young men: yea, and purposely provoke them to talk, to the intent that they may have a proof of every man's wit, and towardness, or disposition to virtue.—More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 5.

The excellency of her beauty was no prouokement to him of lust but of glory.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 81.

In the mene while mine enemies still increase;
And my prouokers hereby doo augmente,
That without cause to hurt me do not cease.
Wyatt. Psalme 38.

Charitas non est procax: love doth not frowardly, she is not a provoker, as there be some men which will provoke their neighbour so far that it is very hard for them to be in charity with them.—Latimer. Ser. 28 Oct. 1552.

By meanes of prouocation on eyther party vsed, the Romaynes issued oute of the cytie and gaue batayl to the Brytons.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 64.

This knight too late his manhood and his might
I did assay, that me right dearly cost;
Ne list I for revenge provoka new fight,
Ne for light ladies' love, that soone is lost.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Whose sharpe provokement them incens'd so sore,
That both were bent t' avenge his usage base,
And gan their shields addresse themselves afore.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 4.

As comon perturbors of the quyet people, and capytaines and prouokers of trayterous rufflings.
Grafton. Hen. VIII. an. 17.

No bargaining line these; no provoc'tive verse;
Nothing but what Lucretia might rehearse.
Cartwright. To the Memory of B. Jonson.

If she be wanton, Phlegm can administer provocatives.
Nabbes. Microcosmus, Act iii.

Swoln with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea-gods from the shore;
With envy Triton heard the martial sound,
And the bold champion, for his challenge, drown'd.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

The meditation of his bounty and goodness will provoke love and gratitude, and is therefore fit to prepare us for thanksgiving.—Wilkins. The Gift of Prayer, c. 6.

Ev'n Arius and Pelagius durst provoke
To what the centuries preceding spoke.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

The inferior gods, demons, and heroes, being all of them able to do us either good or hurt, and being also irascible, and therefore provokable by our neglect of them, it is as well our interest as our duty, to pacifie and appease them by worship.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 188.

The reflection calculated above all others to allay the haughtiness of temper, which is ever finding out provocations, and which renders anger so impetuous, is that which the gospel proposes; namely, that we ourselves are or shortly shall be suppliants for mercy and pardon at the judgment seat of God.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. iii. pt. iii. c. 7.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 327.

PROW. } Fr. Proue; It. Pròra; Sp. Proa;
PRORE. } Lat. Prora, which Vossius has no doubt is contracted from πρῶρα, and that he thinks is from πρῶρα, to look forward. Brende writes prore; and so does Pope, for the sake of rhyme.

The Lat. Proreta, was the man who looked out, kept a look out, (sc.) from the prow, and the prow may have been the place of keeping a look out; and, hence,—

The fore-part of the ship.

With that they bid vs amaine English dogs, and came vpon our quarter star-board: and giuing vs fine cast pieces out of her proue, they sought to lay vs aboard.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 566.

And hauing rampired the prores for defence of the souldiers that were behynde, they stode in their galleis and dyd shoote and caste dartes against their enemies without anye perill or daunger to themselves.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 59.

The prores dyd strike against the puppis; such as went before troubled them that came after.—Id. Ib. fol. 281.

— And secure with the beaked prow

Of hym that dare well undertake.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

This is a faintnes of heart and not proweess, not to bee able to suffer penury for a while.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 229.

Great ayd thereto his mighty puissance
And dreaded name shall give in that sad day;
Where also prooffe of thy prow vallaunce
Thou then shalt make, t' increase thy lover's pray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

Ne is thy fate, ne is thy fortune ill,
To love the prouest knight that ever was:
Therefore submit thy wayes unto his will,
And doe, by all dew meanes, thy destiny fulfill.—Id. Ib.

(For they be two the prouest knights on grownd,
And oft approv'd in many a hard assay.)—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3.

His daughter, sought by many prouest knights,
Both Paynim, and the peers of Charlemaine.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

Hear next how my associate warriors fell,
O'erwhelm'd with huge afflictions, and oppress'd,
In their own realms, by feminine deceit,
To them more fatal than the prouess'd foe.
Fenton. Homer Imitated.

PROWL, v. } Skinner forms from the Fr.
PROWLER. } Proie, prey, the verb proier, and thence the diminutive proieler, from which he imagines we have formed the verb to prowl, to search for prey.

To go about in search of; to ramble or wander about in search of prey; to prey or plunder; to pillage.

Though ye prolle ay, ye shul it never find.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16, 880.

And went banketyng and prowlyng from byshope to byshope, and from abbot to abbot.
Bale. English Volaries, pt. ii.

Such run about prowlers, by night and by day,
See punished justly, for prowling away.
Tusser. Husbandry. September.

He answer'd: There is argue in your sight,
A worth that works not men for benefit,
Like prollers or impostors.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

By how many tricks did he proll money from all parts of

Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

PROXENET. See PROXY. Fr. Proxénète, a broker, a huckster, a mean dealer between party and party.

The most notable of those offices that can be assigned to the spirit of nature, and that suitably to his name, is the translocation of the souls of beasts into such matter as is most fitting for them, he being the common prozenet or contractor of all natural matches and marriages betwixt forms and matter.
More. The Immortality of the Soul, pt. iii. b. iii. c. 13.

Nearest to; nigh or near to, without aught between, immediate, close to.

We would muche rather haue remitted these iniuries in respect of proximite of blood to our nephew, than we did heretofore y^e inuasion of his father.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 34.

For the proximity of blood, he is the more stirred to have special eye and regard to our surety and good education, in this our said minority.—Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. No. 6.

We hastily conclude that impossible, which we see not in the proximate capacity of its efficient.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

Not that God is thus present to all the world, by way of identity with it, but he is present with it, by way of nearness and inward proximity to it.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 13.

The three terms [of the propositions] are called the remote matter of a syllogism; and the three propositions the proxime or immediate matter of it.—Watts. Logick, pt. iii. c. 1.

They know it immediatly or proximately from their proper guides, or other instructors; who in the last resort learn it from the ancients.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 287.

A dark conceit and a dull one have a great proximity in modern wit.—Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, Pref.

PROXY. } In Low Lat. Proxinetum. The ProXISHIP. } Fr. have Proxénète; and H. More

One who takes care for, manages or acts for another; the agent, manager, or deputy; the agency, the deputation of another.

They determined there to proceed in the principall cause, vnles the K. would send a proxie, intending by this iniurie and wrong, to enforce his highnesse to the exhibition of a proxie there.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 978. an. 1536.

In the upper house they giue their assent and dissent each man seuerally and by himselfe, first, for himselfe, and then for so many as he hath proxie.

Smith. Commonwealth, b. ii. c. 3.

And think their generals but their deputies,
Who must for them by proxy wed the crown.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 1.

These two cases are so like, that one might think them to have bin transcribed the one from the other; the same manner of wedding apparitions: the same correspondency and proxiship between these spirits and their images.

Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 16. p. 394.

—Strict duty bids my care extend
And reach to all, who on that care depend,
Bids me with servants keep a steady hand,
And watch o'er all my proxies in the land.

Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

Another privilege is, that every peer, by licence obtained from the king, may make another lord of parliament his proxy, to vote for him in his absence. A privilege, which a member of the other house can by no means have, as he is himself but a proxy for a multitude of other people.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. b. i. c. 2.

PRUCE, i. e. pruss, Prussian leather.

dery seems to be applied to—

An excess, or affectation of prudence or discretion; a precision or nicety of discretion; an excess of seriousness or gravity in demeanour.

For it is writun, I schal distrie the wisdom of wise men, and I schal reprove the prudence of prudent men.

Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 1.

I wyll destroye the wisdom of the wyse, and wyll caste awaye the vnderstandynge of the prudent.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

As ghe moun rede and undurstonde my prudence in the mynsterie of Crist.—Wiclif. Effesies, c. 3.

And the Lord preiside the baylif of wickidness: for he hadde don prudently, for the sones of this world ben more prudent in her generacioun: than the sones of light.

Id. Luk, c. 16.

Prudence is goodly wisdom of things.

Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

O marueilous politicall and princely prudencie, in time of peace to foresee, and preuent, (and that most puissantly and inuincibly) all possible malice, fraude, force, and mischief for rain.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 7.

Which being contrarious to the lawes and ordinances of his realme, hee trusteth your prudency will not require, but take that is past, for a thing don, and iustly done.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 980. an. 1536.

And the which your most loving and obedient subjects, your highness prudently and quietly, without any manner of disturbance, by a long time most graciously hath preserved, sustained and defended.

Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. iii. No. 16.

Our blessed Saviour having prefac'd concerning prudence, adds to the integrity of the precept, and for the conduct of our religion, that we be simple as well as prudent, innocent as well as wary.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

—Being prepossess'd with such a passion,
I should (upon prudential motives only)
Be engaged (as now you find me) to marry
A lady whom I never saw.

Take. Adventures of Five Hours, Act ii.

And therefore also they judge of humane actions by the event; for being uncapable of operable circumstances, or rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 3.

I know not how any honest man can charge his conscience in prudentially conniving at such falsities.

More. On Enthusiasm, pt. ii. s. 47.

It is no disparagement to a wise man to learn, and by suspecting the fallibility of things, and his own aptness to mistake, to walk prudently and safely, with an eye to God, and an ear open to his superior.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

Another customer happened to be a famous prude; her elbows were rivetted to her sides, and her whole person so ordered as to inform every body, that she was afraid they should touch her.—Tatler, No. 5. (by Swift.)

In this case he is to consider what prudential inducements he has to do the action, or forbear it.

Sharp, vol. ii. Case of a doubting Conscience.

Some people, tho' they spoil every thing by an undue management of it, lose opportunities, and overlook occasions; yet they must be thought to be still carrying on designs of policy, to err and mistake prudentially.

South, vol. vii. Ser. 8.

Nor wert thou, Isis! wanting to the day,
(Though Christ-church long kept prudishly away.)

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

Many stanzas, in poetick measures, contain rules relating to common prudentials, as well as to religion.—Watts.

Virtue and vice had bound'ries in old time,
Not to be pass'd: and she, that had renounc'd
Her sex's honour, was renounc'd herself
By all that priz'd it; not for prudry's sake,
But dignity's, resentful of the wrong.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

I know you all expect from seeing me,
Some formal lecture, spoke with prudish face.

Garrick. Prologue.

PRUNE, v. } Also written proine, preen.
PRUNER. } Tyrwhitt derives from the Fr.
Provigner, "which," he says, "seems originally to have signified—to take cuttings from vines in order to plant them: from hence it has been used for the cutting away of the superfluous shoots of all trees, which we call pruning; and from that operation which birds, and particularly hawks, perform upon themselves, of picking out their superfluous or damaged feathers. In allusion to this last sense, Damian is said to proine and pike himself." See PROPAGATE.

To cut away, (sc. for the purpose of improving the growth;) to clear away; to trim.

Up riseth Damian the next morwe,
Al passed was his siknesse and his sorwe.
He kembeth him, he proineth him and piketh,
He doth all that his lady lust and liketh.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9885.

Loue pruneth him to semen amiable.

Id. The Court of Loue, p. 371.

Up stood, and pruned him the bird,
Which dead had be in all our sight,
And both together forth their flight
Tooke singing from vs.

Id. Dreame.

But as the bird upon the bryer
Doth pricke and proyne her without care,
Not knowing alas (poor foole) how nere
She is unto the fowler's snare.

Vncer. Auct. Comp. of the Losse of Liberty by Loue.

And so those imps which might in time have sprong
Alofte (good Lord) and serude to shielde the state,
Are either nipt, with such untimely frosts,
Or else growe crookt, bycause they be not proynd.

Machin. The Dumb Knight, Act iii. sc. 1.

To which purpose, [to fence off the injuries of weather] as also for the more easy and nimble gliding of the body through the air, the provision nature hath made, and the instinct of these animals to preen and dress their feathers, is admirable.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vii. c. 1.

When they are ruffled or discomposed, the bird with her bill can easily preen them, (plumulae or contiguous filaments,) and reduce them to their due position again.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Horace will our superfluous branches prune,
Give us new rules, and set our harp in tune.

Waller. On the Earl of Roscommon.

The great husbandman of souls takes this course with his spiritual vines, to add the pruning-hook of his judgments to the more gentle manurings of his mercy; and when watering will not do, to dig about them.—South, vol. v. Ser. 9.

Youth is fair virtue's season, virtue then Requires the pruner's hand.

Shenstone. Moral Pieces. Economy, pt. i.

PRUNE. Fr. Prune; It. Prugna; Sp. Pruna; Lat. Prunus.

A plum,—generally applied to a plum dried. See the quotation from Locke.

The damask prune rather bindeth than lowseth, and is more commodious vnto the stomake.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. p. 27.

The prunes we have from France are a great black plumb that grows about Montauban and those parts; they dry them as much as they can in the sun, and what wants to dry them perfectly they make out by the heat of the oven.

With heavenly notes, that did all other pas,
The outrage of his furious fit relented.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

It is much to be wished, that they that allot any constant part of their time to private psalmody, and to that end have,
as the ancients prescribed and practised, gotten the psaltery perfect by heart (quilibet vinitor — every tradesman at his manual work having by this means the whole time of his labour a vacancy for his devotion,) would be careful to keep their hearts in strict attendance on their tongues.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 7.

Herein also those angels which shall then be our præcen- tors are here pleased to follow, and attend our motions, and invisibly to assist in those quires where they can find meet company, the hearts, pure and whole hearts, the spirits and inflamed affections, and voices of psalmodists.

Id. Ib. p. 1.

He was driven for revenge and his own defence, to answer with great and stout words, saying, that indeed he had no skill to tune a harp, nor a viol, nor to play on a psalterion.
North. Plutarch, p. 96.

She tun'd to pious notes the psalmist's lyre,
And fill'd Isaiah's breast with more than Pindar's fire.

PSEUDO-APOSTLE. Pseudo, Gr. Ψευδος, PSEUDO-EPI/SCOPY. false, from ψευδew, PSEUDO-EPIGRAPHOUS. to deceive.

A false, a pretended apostle, or episcopy.
Pseud-epigraphous, Gr. Ψευδεπιγραφος, inscribed with a false name; false ascribed to.

For these Phillipian pseudapostles, two ways were they enemies to the crosse of Christ; in their doctrines, in their practice.—Bp. Hall. Ser. Phil. iii. 18, 19.

Out of a more tenacious cling to worldly respects, [he] stands up for all the rest to justify a long usurpation and convicted pseudepiscopacy of prelates.

Herodotus, supposing Homer and Hesiod to have been the ancientest of all the Greek poets, seemed, therefore, to conclude the Orphick poems to have been pseudepigraphous.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 296.

Much less can the same be evinced from that pretended Aristotelick book, De Secretiore parte Divinae Sapientiae secundum Aegyptios, greedily swallowed down also by Kir-cherus, but unquestionably pseudepigraphous.—Id. Ib. p. 320.

PTISAN. Fr. Ptisane, tisane; Lat. Ptisana;
Gr. Πτισανη, from πιττω-ειν, to beat or bruise.

See the quotation from Elyot. There are, however, other receipts for ptisan.

For what auncient phisition is there, that in his workes commendeth not ptysane, whiche is none other than pure barley, braied in a mortar, and sodden in water.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21.

Your bloodless veins, your appetite will fail,
Unless you raise them by a powerful meal.
Take this ptisan—"What will it cost? Nay hold."
"A very trifle." Francis. Horace. Sat. b. ii.

PTOLEMA'ICK. From Ptolemæus, the astro-nomer.

The Ptolemaic system, by destroying all that simplicity of motion to be expected in these works of God, hath, along with its civil and practical use, occasioned a speculative mischief, and inclined men to atheism; as appears in the case of Alphonsus, who impiously boasted, that, had he been consulted about the Solar system, he could have advised how it might have been better constructed.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Intro.

PUBBLE. Perhaps bubble; i. e. blown, puffy, crude pubescency unto perfection.—Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

When nature is allowed free scope, the curiosity, during early youth, is alive to every external object, and to every external occurrence, while the powers of imagination and reflexion do not display themselves till a much later period; the former till about the age of puberty, and the latter till we approach to manhood.

As I haue sayde, publyke toke his begynnynge of people, whiche in Latin is populus: in which worde is conteyned, all the inhabytantes of a realme or citie, of what astate or condition so euer they be.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 1.

Of this ordynance and bondes, there were made instrumentes, publikes, and letters patentes.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 173.

As I desire that you wil not condemne me without prooffe, so am I contented that if hereafter you finde me guiltie, your definitive sentence shall then passe publikelie vnder

How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his God-like office now mature.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

For the instruction therefore of all sorts of men to eternal life, it is necessarie, that the sacred and sauing truth of God bee openly published unto them. Which open publication of heavenly mysteries, is by an excellencie termed preaching.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. s. 18.

— But now

Full grown to man, acknowledg'd, as I hear,
By John the Baptist, and in publick shown,
Son own'd from Heaven by his Father's voice;
I look'd for some great change.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

When Socrates reproved Plato at a feast, Plato told him, it had been better he had told him his fault in private; for to speak it publickly is indecency. Socrates replied, and so it is for you, publickly to condemn that indecency.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 25.

We leave the narrow lanes behind, and dare
Th' unequal combat in the public square.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. ii.

I shall now only add this property of our expected bliss, that the vast multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen propriety in it.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 292.

Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public: to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 2.

The communication of a libel to any one person is a publi- cation in the eye of the law; and, therefore, the sending an abusive private letter to a man is as much a libel as if it were openly printed, for it equally tends to a breach of the peace.—Id. Ib.

In such prosecutions, the only points to be enquired into are, first, the making or publishing of the book or writing; and, secondly, whether the matter be criminal: and, if both these points are against the defendant, the offence against the public is complete.—Id. Ib.

The methodized reasonings of the great publicists and jurists form the digest and jurisprudence of the Christian world.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

PUCK. Piers Plouhman writes pouk. (See ante.) Puke, in the Islandic, is spiritus malus, (Hickes;) in Suio-Goth. Diabolus; and poker, dæmon vel potius dæmones in plurium numero, (Ihre.) Skinner interprets Ne non hell pouke, in Piers Plouhman, No pug of hell; and would derive pug from the A. S. Piga; Dan. Pige, puellula. Dr.
Th. H. thinks pug, and bug, q. d. bug-bear, the same word. (See Bug.) But the A. S. Pac, the past part. of the verb pac-an, to deceive by false appearances,

imitation, resemblance, semblance, or representation; to counterfeit, to delude, to illude, to dissemble, to impose upon, by the mere change of the vowel, is puc, or pack; and by the further change of c into g, pug; and by mere changes of a similar kind the Islandic and Suio-Goth. may have been formed. See Tooke, Taylor's Ed. vol. ii. p. 367, n.

Puck's tricks account for his name from this verb.

And so likewise those which Mizaldus calls Ambulones, that walke about midnight on great heaths and desart places, which (saith Lavater) drew men out of the way, and lead them all night a by-way, or quite barre them of their way: these have severall names in severall places; we commonly call them Pucks.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 30.

O, they are pinching puckfists!—B. Jonson. New Inn.

This puck seems but a dreaming dolt,

Still walking like a ragged colt,

And oft out of a bush doth bolt,

Of purpose to deceive us;

And leading us, makes us to stray

Long winter's nights out of the way,

And when we stick in mire and clay,

He doth with laughter leave us.—Drayton. Nymphidia.

PU'CKER, v. } Lye thinks it (q.) pocker, in

PU'CKER, n. } pustulas sufflari. Serenius,— from poke, a bag; with which probably it has the same origin; viz. the verb to poke; to poke or push, (sc.) into rumples, furrows, wrinkles.

To rumple, to wrinkle; to gather into a rough surface; to ruffle.

He fell down; and not being able to rise again, had his belly puckered together like a sachel, before the chamberlain could come to help him.

PU'DDER. See POTHER.

PU'DDING. Fr. Boudin; Low Lat. Bodinus, from the Lat. Botulus, l being changed into n; and this from the Gr. Βυθαλον, itself from βυειν, or βυζειν, farcire, opplere, to stuff, to fill up; and thus applied, in cookery, to some substance (paste, e.g.) stuffed or filled with animal or vegetable food; to various articles of food, bearing some resemblance either in the manner of making or cooking, or both.

A pudding-sleeve,—a sleeve large and loose, like an empty pudding-bag.

I am ashamed to remembre, that he wold send to his frendes two morsels of meate, a pece of podynge, or the carkaisse of a capon.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. p. 214.

If you will come, you shall be welcome, but I tell you aforehand, you shall have but slender fare, one dish—that is all; what is that, saide hee? A pudding and nothing else.

Latimer. 3d Ser. before K. Edward.

To abstain from a strangled hen, or a bloody pudding, could not of themselves be necessary; but the commandment came, authority did interpose, and then they were made so.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

Where, in nice balance, truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. i.

He sees, yet hardly can believe,
About each arm a pudding-sleeve.

Swift. Baucis & Philemon.

But Mars, that still protects the stout,

In pudding-time came to his aid.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

PU'DDLE, n. } See PIDDLE, and POOL. A

PU'DDLE, v. } small piece of standing water, of water and dirt; a muddy plash.

To puddle,—to defile with mud; to bemire, to muddy; to stir up or among the mud or dirt.

He did Harald body do drawe vp also tite,

Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. v.

Limy, or thick pudly water killeth them.—Carew.

Where'er the standing puddle loathsome lies,
Thither in crowds the thirsty soldier flies.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

I am no slave; the noblest blood of Africk Runs in my veins; a purer stream than thine;
For, tho' deriv'd from the same source, thy current Is pud'd and defil'd with tyranny.

Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act i. sc. 1.

When the monster [Nero] was obliged to fly with his wife Sporus, and to drink puddle, were men affected in the same manner, as when the venerable Galba, with all his faults and errors, was murdered by a revolted mercenary soldiery.—Burke. From the Old to the New Whigs.

Bashfulness or shamefacedness; modesty, purity.

And to be brief, neither can husbands endure the pudicity and honesty of their wives: nor wives the love of their husbands; ne yet friends the mutuall conversation one with another, if there do an angry and cholerick humour go withall.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 107.

Some females shut up themselves to keep the sacred fire of pudicity and continence.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 7.

Me of my lawfull pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance; did it with A pudencie so rosie, the sweet view on't Might well haue warm'd olde Saturne; that I thought her
As chaste as vn-sunn'd snow.

Boyish, childish; weak, trifling, or trivial, as boys or children.

[Franciscus Junius] was born at Heidelberg, a famous city and university in Germany, an. 1589, educated in puerile learning at Leyden in Holland.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

'Tis sure a practice that favours much of pedantry; a reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 7.

I found points of wit, and quirks of epigram, even in the Davidis, an heroic poem, which is of an opposite nature to those puerilities.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

Our public hives of puerile resort,
That are of chief and most approv'd report,
To such base hopes, in many a sordid soul,
Owe their repute in part but not the whole.

Cowper. Tirocinium.

One thing is certain, that when we translate any of Aristotle's demonstrations from the general and enigmatical language in which he states it, into more familiar and intelligible terms, by applying it to a particular example, the mystery at once disappears, and resolves into some self-evident or identical puerility.

Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 1.

Yet let me tell you, sir, there is a man,
Curse on the hearts that hate him, that would better,
Better than you, or all your puffy race,
That better would become the great battalion.

Dryden. Duke of Guise, Act ii. sc. 2.

The puffy poison spreads, and heaves around,
Till all the man is in the monster drown'd.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

Lest he should be too much puffed up with these praises, he reminds him at the same time of his mortality, and tells him, that his clothing of flesh is perishable, and that he must ere long be clothed with earth, the end of all things.

I puke, I nauseate, yet he thrusts in more.

Pope. Satires of Donne, Sat. 4.

The griper senna, and the puker rue,
The sweetener sassafras, are added too.

Garth. The Dispensary, c. 3.

Nay if you once begin to puke and cough,
Go to the nurse.

Smart. Epilogue.

A gentleman, that lives not far from Change,
This week, in short, as all the Alley knows,
Taking a puke, has thrown up three black crows.

PULCHRITUDE. Sp. Pulcritud; Lat. Pul-chritudo, from pulcher; and, pulcher, the Gr. Πολυχειρ, (πολυς, and χειρ, the hand;) Romani qui omnia ponerent in fortitudine, eum demum bonum, et formosum putarent, qui esset fortis. (Scaliger, De Caus. c. 22.) And hence pulcher,—

Brave, excelling in bravery, in every virtue, in every good quality; and, thus, fair, beauteous, or beautiful.

Honour to thee celestiall and clere
Goddesse of loue, and to thy celsitude,
That yeuest vs light so fer down from thy spere,
Piercing our hertes with thy pulchritude.

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

Your noble persone, so formed & figured in shape and stature with force and pulchritude, signifieth the present pleasure of our Lorde God wrought in your noble grace.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

Themistius, who was prætor of Byzantium, maintain'd an opinion, that the pulchritude and preservation of the world consisted in varieties and dissimilitudes, as also in eccentric and contrary motions.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 26.

This rather makes for what we aime at, that pulchritude is conveigh'd indeed by the outward senses unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which relishes it.

PULLEY. } Fr. Poulie, from the verb to PU'LLEED. } pull, (Skinner.) And see Menage, and Minshew.

A pulley,—wherein a cord runneth to draw any thing, because it pulleth up continually.

Ther may no man out of the place it drive
For non engine, of windas, or polive.

Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,498.

Theis being let down into the riuer wyth pulleyes, he made to be beaten fast in wyth commaunders not plōme vpright like a post, but shoryng lyke the side of a roof of a house, so as they might leane with the ronning of the stream.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 95.

For the horses he had, them he made to be girt before, one after another, and then did softly trise them up with long pulleys fastened to the beams, their hindmost part standing on the ground, and their foremost being aloft.

North. Plutarch, p. 504.

Being pulley'd up, with the open air it receives a crusty kind of hardness, and so becomes perfect free-stone; and before it is sent up from the pit, they can reduce it to any form.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 16.

Our crowded pantomimes are proofs of that.
What eager transport stares from every eye,
When pulleyes rattle, and our genii fly!

Whitehead. Prologue to the School for Lovers.

Their heavy sides th' inflated bellows heave,
Tugged by the pulley'd line, and, with their blast
Continuous, the sleeping embers rouse,
And kindle into life.

PULLULATE, v. } Fr. Pulluler; It. and PULLULA'TION. } Lat. Pullulare; pullos, seu stolones emittere; to send forth young shoots.
See POULT.

To bud or bourgeon; to germinate; to shoot, or spring, or sprout.

These were the generations or pullulations of the heavenly and earthly nature, of the divine and animal life in man, when God created them.

More. The Moral Cabbala, pt. iv. c. 2.

All these, and many more that I am not at leisure to reckon up, be but the genuine pullulations of the animal life, and in themselves they have neither good nor hurt in them.—Id. Defence of the Moral Cabbala, c. 2.

Instead of repairing the mistake, and restoring religious liberty, which would have stifled this pullulating evil in the seed, by affording it no further nourishment, they took the other course.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 6.

Money is but as drugs and lenitive ointments, to mitigate the swellings and diseases of the body, whose root remaineth still within, and pullulateth again, after the same or some other manner; but wisdom is a spirit incorporated into radical humour, giving health, strength, and life to the body, to extirpate the roots of all diseases.

Grainger. On Ecclesiastes, (1621.) p. 175.

PULMO'NICK, n. } Pulmo, — the lungs; by transposition of the letter l from πλευμων, Att.
for πνευμων, from πνε-ειν, to breathe.
Of or pertaining to the lungs.

In such a season, weak and tender people, and those that are subject to nervous or pulmonick distempers, ought either to go into the country, or to be at home soon after sunset.
Cheyne. On Health, c. 1. s. 5.

Pulmonicks are subject to consumptions, and the old to asthmas.—Arbuthnot.

Compressive round the incumbent ether lies,
And strict its elemental fold applies,
Whence either pulmonary lobe expires,
And all the interior subtle breath retires.
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. iv.

PULP. } Fr. Pulpe; It. Pōlpa; Sp. and PULPOUS. } Lat. Pulpa. Vossius prefers,—a PULPY. } palpitatione; quia caro sine ossibus (id enim est pulpa) mollis sit, ac tremula; because the flesh without the bones (for that is the pulp) is soft and tremulous. (See TO PALPI- TATE.) In Fr. it is—

“The brawn, or solid and musculy flesh of the body; also the pith of plants, &c.” (Cotgrave.)
Also the soft portion of fruit, &c.

For this loose pulp that is thus wrapt up within our cranium is but a spongy and porous body, and pervious not only to the animal spirit, but also to more grosse juice and liquor.—More. Ant. against Atheism, pt. i. b. i. c. 11.

By dissection you discover this worker of miracles to be nothing but a poor silly contemptible knob or protuberancy, consisting of a thin membrane containing a little pulpy matter, much of the same nature with the rest of the brain.
Id. Ib.

In beans the leaf and root sprout from the germen, the main sides split, and lie by; and in some pull'd up near the time of blooming, we have found the pulpous sides intire or little wasted.—Browne. Urn Burial, c. 3.

In lupins these pulpy sides do sometimes arise with the stalk in a resemblance of two fat leaves.—Id. Ib.

PUL

The pulse,—that which, the motion or action which, drives out, (sc.) the blood from the heart; that which beats or strikes, as the blood at every expulsion. And to pulse,—
To drive; to beat.

Therewith his poulee, and paums of his hondes
They gan to frote, and wete his temples twain.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

And I [my sunne] thy noble name with foule reproch

Id. Ib.

When Falconbridge (with gentle feeling) tries
How strong the pulse of their affection beats.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

The physicians hold, that in every well-disposed body there be above 4000 pulsations every hour, and some pulses have been known to beat above 30,000 times an hour in acute fevers.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 37.

But these external evils do not so much trouble us as an inward pungent and pulsatory ach within the skull, somewhat lower than the place of his hurt.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 418.

To make [the muscular constriction of the heart] nothing but a pulsifick corporeal quality in the substance of the heart itself, is very unphilosophical and absurd.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 161.

The operation of nature is different from mechanism, it doing not its work by trusion or pulsion, by knockings or thrustings, as if it were without that which it wrought upon.—Id. Ib. p. 156.

I have found by trials purposely made, that the examples of suction are not the only noted ones of attraction that may be reduced to pulsion.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 129.

When the ear receives any simple sound, it is struck by a single pulse of the air, which makes the ear-drum and the other membranous parts vibrate according to the nature and species of the stroke.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. § 11.

With smiles, and adulation bland,
They join'd her side, and seiz'd her hand:
Their touch envenom'd sweets instill'd,
Her frame with new pulsations thrill'd.
Brooke. Fable. The Female Seducers.

And therefore upon a similar principle the Cornelian law
De Injuriis prohibited pulsation as well as verberation; distinguishing verberation, which was accompanied with pain, from pulsation, which was attended with none.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iiii. c. 8.

PULSE. Skinner thinks from the verb to pull; because they are pulled or plucked, and not mown or cut: and so—legumen, quia legatur, because gathered. But the Lat. Puls was a pottage made of the produce of leguminous plants; and (though not adopted in the Italian or French,) may have given in English a name to the plants themselves.

Plants whose produce is pulled or gathered;
opposed to those which are cut, though similar in growth or culture.

—If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but freeze,
Th' All-giver would be unthank'd, would be unprais'd:
Not half his riches known, and yet despis'd.

Pulvil is applied to a sweet-scented or perfumed powder.

Sometimes the bodies mingled by the fire are differing enough as to fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire that itself does scarce afterwards separate, but only pulverize them.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 489.

An inquisitive man, who is a scholar as well as a traveller, assured me, that whilst he was in some part of the Indies, he furnished himself with some liquid substances afforded by wounded plants, that as soon as he came near Europe, and not before, turned into consistent and pulver-

PUNNING, n. } Serenius goes to the Islandic PUNSTER. } Funalagh, frivolous, in a sense transferred from fun, ashes. Mr. Todd is very much inclined to make fun of it.

Fr. Pointe, discur de pointes, a punster. And Addison might have described a pun to be,—

A conceit or witticism, the point of which arises from the use, &c. See the first quotation from the Spectator.

Inspid jesters, and unpleasant fools,
A corporation of dull punning drolls.

Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Having pursued the history of a punn, from its original to its downfall, I shall here define it to be a conceit arising from the use of two words that agree in the sound, but differ in the sense.—Spectator, No. 61.

All humour had something of the quibble. The very language of the court was punning.

Shaftesbury. Freedom of Wit & Humour, pt. i. s. 2.

PUNCHEON. } Punch, n. any thing pointed, a pointed tool or instrument. To punch, v.—

To strike with any thing pointed; to pierce or penetrate, bore or perforate—with a punch or puncheon.

Puncheon, the vessel, Fr. Poinçon, perhaps so called from the pointed form of the staves; the vessel bellying out in the middle, and tapering towards each end; and hence punch (i.e. the large belly) became applied, as Pepys records, to any thing thick and short.

This was the same sword that entreth through, euen to the diuiding of the soule and the spirite, whose edge hath punched and striken the Jewes heartes.

Udal. Actes of the Apostles, c. 2.

Their parlous pykes in hand, and puncheons close in stauers they beare,

And pykes lyke broaches long, and fight with foynne of pointed speare.

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii.

That other signet of gold, w^t my puncheon of ivory and silver, I geue and bequeath unto Robert my secunde sone.

Fabyan, vol. i. Pref. p. vii.

— With a goade he puncht each furious dame,
And made them every one cast downe their greene and leaue speares.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

He did teach his souldiers to carry long javelins or puncheon-staves, wherewith they might wound their enemies lifting up their swords to strike them.

North. Plutarch, p. 130.

Here I did make the workmen drink, and saw my coach cleaned and oyled; and staying among poor people there in the alley, did hear them call their fat child punch, which pleased me mightily, that word being become a word of common use for all that is thick and short.

Yet repentance is a duty full of fears, and sorrow, and labour; a vexation to the spirit; an afflictive, penal, or punitive duty.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

God had purpos'd to punish our instrumental punishers, though now Christians, by other heathen, according to his diuine retaliation; invasion for invasion, spoil for spoil, destruction for destruction.—Milton. Hist. of Britain, b. v.

Their general rule was, that because the lesser sins came in by a daily incursion, therefore they were to be cut off by a daily repentance: which because it was daily, could not be so intense and signally punitive as the sharper repentances for the seldome returning sins.

Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 3. § 6.

But since to punish is properly an act of a superior to an inferior, and two kingdoms or nations seem to be equal, and neither to have any superiority or jurisdiction over the other, it may be doubted, how the one's making war upon the other, can be properly an act of punitive justice.

South, vol. x. Ser. 6.

The having conferred many to righteousness, shall as the Scripture foretels, confer a star-like and immortal brightness; since (which is chiefly considerable) the knowledge of particular actions, and, consequently, persons, seems requisite to the attainment of that great end of God, in the day of judgment, the manifestation of his punitive and remunerative justice.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 288.

I am very apt to think, that great severity of punishment does but very little good; nay, great harm in education: and I believe it will be found that, ceteris paribus, those children who have been most chastised, seldom make the best men.—Locke. Of Education, s. 43.

It is clear, that the right of punishing crimes against the law of nature, as murder and the like, is in a state of mere nature vested in every individual.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1.

I proceed, in the next place, to consider the general nature of punishments: which are evils or inconveniences consequent upon crimes and misdemeanors; being devised, denounced, and inflicted by human laws, in consequence of disobedience or misbehaviour in those, to regulate whose conduct such laws were respectively made.—Id. Ib.

God often causes one provision to answer several purposes, and so may make moral evil, as well as natural, at the same time both prudential and punitive: but it is not apparent from experience that he always does so.

At the well-head the purest streames arise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7

In's body too no critique eye could find
The smallest blemish, to belye his mind;
He was all pureness, and his outward part
But represents the picture of his heart.
Cowley. On the Death of John Littleton.

Your like we in a burning glass may see,
When the sun's rays therein contracted be Bent on some object, which is purely white,
We find that colour doth dispiece the light,
And stands untainted.—Drayton. Elegy to the Lady J. S.

I would not be a puritan, though he Can preach two hours, and yet his sermon be But half a quarter long. Cowley. A Vote.

Alas, these precise puritanicall angels, saints, and shepherds (as some I feare account them) knew no such pompous pagan Christmas courtships or solemnities.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act viii. sc. 6.

Licentious Christians, who make their will and lusts their law, may deeme it puritanisme, or brand it for ouerstrict precisenesse, in this dissolute and vnruely age.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

But the feast of Lupercalia, considering the time of celebrating thereof, it seemeth it is ordained for a purification. For it is celebrated on the unfortunate days of the moneth of February, which are called the purging days.

North. Plutarch, p. 26.

Faith is a great purger and purifier of the soul: purifying your hearts by faith, saith the apostle.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The whiles my handes I [Pilate] washt in purify,
The whiles my soule was soyled with fowle iniquity.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

He said, Asphalion swift the laver brings;
Alternate all partake the grateful springs:
Then from the rites of purify repair,
And with keen gust the savory viands share.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Molineux, of Maryborough in Ireland, travelled afterwards into several foreign countries; was at Rome, where (tho' puritanically educated under the tuition of Sam. Radcliff, of Brasen. Coll.) he changed his religion, returned a well-bred man, was knighted, and in the grand rebellion suffered for the royal cause.—Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. i.

Those prudent and honest men, when thus appealed unto, gave it as their deliberate judgment, "That the Puritans ought to conform, rather than make a schism: and that the churchmen ought to indulge the others' scruples, rather than hazard one."

Warburton. Alliance between Church and State, b. iii.

It was a received opinion in the ancient world, that human nature had contracted a stain or pollution; and that not only particular purifyings, but also some general sanctification was necessary to put man in a capacity of being restored to the favour of the Deity.—Id. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

In English you are no purist.—Chesterfield. Letters.

PURGATO'RIAN.

PURGING, n.

Fr. Purger; It. Purgare; Sp. Purgar; Lat. Purgare, to purify, to cleanse. See PURE, and the quotations there from North and J. Taylor.

To cleanse, to clear, to scour; to wipe off, to clear away, to eject or expel foulness or filthiness, physical or moral; to clear from accusation, to excuse.

Purgatory,—so called because in it the souls of the dead were believed to be purged or purified from the pollution of venial sins. See the quotation from Sharp.

Which also whanne he is the brightnesse of glorie, and figure of his substaunce, and berith alle thingis bi word of his vertue, he makith purgacioun of synnes.—Wiclif. Eb. c. 1.

Whiche sonne beyng the bryghtnes of hys glory, and very ymage of his substaunce, bearynge vp all thinges wyth y^e word of hys power, hath in his owne person purged our synnes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therevpon they fell to weapinge and purginge of themselves.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 129.

After that the purgaciō hath wrought, thirstines and sounde slepe be signes that the body is sufficiently purged.

Cesar, accepting their purgation, learned the waye perfectly by Diuitiacus.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 33.

Penance is the very purger of synne.

Fisher. Seven Psalmes, Ps. 38. pt. ii.

The sea doth caste vpon the shoare both pearles and precious stones; whereof proceded y^e cause of their great riches, after their marchandise was once known to other nations, the purginges of the seas beinge then esteemed, as man's fancy woulde make the price.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 233.

Purging medicines, for the most part, have their purgative vertue in a fine spirit; as appeareth by that they endure not boiling, without much loss of vertue. And therefore it is of good use in physick, if you can retain the purging vertue, and take away the unpleasant taste of the purger.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 20.

Triall would be also made in herbs poysonous and purgative, whose ill qualitie (perhaps) may be discharged, or attempted, by setting stronger poysons, or purgatives, by them.—Id. Ib. § 491.

Surfets many times turn to purges, both upwards and downwards.—Id. Ib. § 36.

Their doctrine is, That all souls that have not made satisfaction for their sins while they lived, tho' all those sins were remitted, so that they never shall go to hell, but at last shall go to heaven; yet they shall, in the other state, undergo a grievous punishment in a certain kind of prison which they call purgatory, for so long time till they be perfectly purged of their sins.—Sharp, vol. vii. Ser. 8.

Purgatorial fire—how far held by some ancient fathers.
Wheatley. On the Common Prayer, Introd.

This purgatory interval is not unfavourable to a faithless representative, who may be as good a canvasser as he was a bad governor.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

Purgatory, (in Virgil,) the first division, is inhabited by suicides, extravagant lovers, and ambitious warriors; and, in a word, by all those who had indulged the violence of their passions; which made them rather wretched than wicked.—Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

PURITAN. See PURE.

PURL, v. } See PURFLE, from which pur
PURL, n. } is contracted.

PUR'LING, n. } To surround with an edge or border, or fringe; to fringe, to embroider.

To purl, applied to the sound of water, Skinner says, may be from the Lat. Proliquare, or bullire, or formed from the sound. It may be so used from the fringes or edges formed upon the little waves or undulations or eddies of the water, as it ruffles or ripples along, or causes the sound, to which the word is now applied.

To flow with gentle murmur; to murmur; to ripple; to wave, to undulate, to rise as waves do; to run into eddies.

The purl apostrophized by Lloyd is described to be "a medicated malt liquor in which wormwood and aromatics are infused." It is probably so named because it purls or mantles in the glass.

For all the copes and vestementes wer but of one pece, so wouen for the purpose, cloth of tissue and powdered with redde roses purled with fine gold.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which purl'd up to the sky.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece

A pipe a little moistned on the inside, but yet so as there be no drops left, maketh a more solemn sound, than if the pipe were dry: but yet with a sweet degree of sibilation or purling.—The purling I take to be bred between the smoothness of the inward surface of the pipe, which is wet; and the rest of the wood of the pipe, unto which the wet cometh not, but it remaineth dry.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 230.

If he live (as bless the babe, in passion I remember him) to your years, shall he spend his time in pinning, painting, purling, and perfuming as you do?

Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act i. sc. 2.

Where little purling winds like wantons seem to dally,
And skip from bank to bank, from valley trip to valley.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 14.

Whose stream an easie breath doth seem to blow;
Which on the sparkling gravel runs in purles,
As though the waves had been of silver curles.
Id. Mortimeriados, v. 1596.

Whatsoever had a beginning can also have an ending, and it shall die, unless it be daily watered with the purles flowing from the fountain of life, and refreshed with the dew of heaven, and the wells of God.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

So have I seen the little puris of a spring sweat through the bottom of a bank, and intenerate the stubborn pavement, till it hath made it fit for the impression of a child's foot.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 16.

Swift o'er the rolling pebbles, down the hills,
Louder and louder purl the falling rills.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

And chiefly thou of boasted fame,
Of Roman and Imperial name;
O puri! all hail! thy vot'ry steals,
His stockings dangling at his heels,
To where some pendent head invites
The bard to set his own to rights.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle.

PURLIEU. } So (says Skinner) were all PURLIEU-MAN. } lands called, which, having once pertained to the royal forests, were separated by law of the forest-court. Some derive from pour-allée, perambulation; Cowell,—from pur, pure, and lieu, place, q. d. a place free or exempt from the severity of the forest-laws. The Roman law calls that place purum locum, qui sepulchrorum religioni non obstrictis est. It is now applied to—Any place bordering or neighbouring upon;

border, neighbourhood, suburb.

Her purlieus, and her parks, her circuit full as large
As some (perhaps) whose state requires a greater charge.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 16.

In the purlieues of heav'n, and therein plac't
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

If deer come out of the forest into the purlieu, the purlieu-man may hunt and kill him, provided he does it fairly and without forestalling.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 27.

PURLOIN, v. } Junius suspects that elon-PURLOINER. } gare, perlongare, and prolon-PURLOINING, n. } gare, were used in the Lower Ages as equivalent to longè aut procul auferre; and that from perlongare the verb to purloin might be formed. Skinner imagines the Fr. verb Pour-loigner is esloigner, to put far away, a long way off.
To remove, to take away, secretly or clandestinely;
to steal, to pilfer.

So that it was easy to perceive that the body was not taken away by thieves, which would have rather purloined ye whole corpse as it lay, wrapped and wounde vp with the swete smelling spices, with the linen clothes, and the fine kercher.—Udal. Jon, c. 20.

Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity.
Paul. Titus, ii. 10.

In former times, such as had store of coin,
In wars at home, or when for conquests bound,
For fear that some their treasure should purloin,
Gave it to keep to spirits within the ground.
Drayton. The Owl.

But first I must require you to use diligence in presenting specially those purloinings and imbezements, which are of plate, vessels, or whatsoever within the king's house.
Bacon. Charge upon the Commission of the Verge.

For that, by secret malice stirr'd,
Or by an emulous pride invited,
You have purloin'd the favourite bird
In which my mother most delighted.—Prior. The Dove.

I believe the only reason why these purloiners of the public cause such a clutter to be made about their reputations, is to prevent inquisitions that might tend towards making them refund.—Swift. The Examiner, No. 28.

If rigid honesty permit
That I for once purloin the wit
Of him, who, were we all to steal,
Is much too rich the theft to feel.—Churchill. Ghost, b. iv.

PURPARTY. Fr. Pourpartie, portion d'hé-ritage. Roquefort,—pour and partir, to part or share.

Share, division; partnership.

Through which the ground by purparties
Departed is in three parties,
That is Asia, Affrike, Europe.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Men clepen them, [Gorgones,] and but one eie
Amonge them thre in purpartie
Thei had, of which thei might se.—Id. Ib. b. i.

PURPLE, n. } Purpur, both as noun and PURPLE, adj. } verb, was formerly in use.
PURPLE, v. } Fr. Pourpre; It. Porpora; PURPLISH. } Sp. and Lat. Purpura; Gr.
PURPUREAL. } Πορφύρα, which Martinus thinks is a Tyrian word. (See IMPURPLE.) To purple is—

To die, stain, or imbue, tinge or steep in the colour of purple.

And so Jesus went out beringe a crowne of thornys and a cloth of purpur.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 19.

Thē cam Jesus forth, wearing a crowne of thorne and a robe of purple.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Of hue purpureal.—Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

PURPORT, v. } Old Fr. Purport, (Roque-PURPORT, n. } fort and Lacombe.) Argu-mentum, quod scriptum proportat, vel porro portat;
i. e. in progressu exhibit, (Skinner.) And see IMPORT, to which purport may be considered as nearly equivalent.

To convey or carry a meaning, intention, or design; to intend, to design.

In this Treatie there was an expresse article against the reception of the rebels of either prince by other; purporting, that if any such rebell should bee required by the prince whose rebell hee was of the prince confederate, that forthwith the prince confederate should by proclamation command him to auoid the countrie.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 162.

For shee her sexe under that straunge purport
Did use to hide, and plaine appaurence shonne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

Thus there he stood, whilst high over his head
There written was the purport of his sin,
In cyphers strange, that few could rightly read.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 9.

Which in her pale hand purposely she hath,
And drops the poison upon every wight.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

But when he saw Brutus with his sword drawn in his hand, then he pulled his gown over his head, and made no more resistance, and was driven either casually or purposely, by the counsell of the conspirators, against the base, whereupon Pompey's image stood, which ran all of a goar bloud till he was slain.—North. Plutarch, p. 615.

The ship a naked helpless hull is left.
Fore'd round and round, she quits her purpos'd way,
And bounds uncertain o'er the swelling sea.
Roue. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

If our Lord had purposely designed, in the most express and emphatical manner, to declare his real subordination and dependence on the Father, he could not have done it more fully and clearly than he hath in this whole chapter.

and ends in an experimental conclusion.
Beddoes. On Mathematical Evidence, p. 24.

PURPRISE. Fr. Pourpris, from pour-prendre, to take wholly, (to comprise, qv.) to contain, to inclose.

An inclosure, a close.

Go we to daunger hastily,
And let vs shew him openly,
That he hath not aright wrought,
Whan that he set not his thought
To keepe better the purprise.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

But their wives and children [were] to assemble all together unto a certain place in Phocis, and environ the whole pour-prise and precinct thereof with a huge quantity of wood, and there to set certaine guards to watch and ward.

PURSY. Fr. Poussiff; cheval poussif, from pulsivus, q.d. ilia pulsans, or ilia ducens; Se-renius,—from porre, tussis, a cough. The Fr. Bourser, to purse, is also to gather, make bulch, (bulge,) or bear out, as a full purse, (Cotgrave.) And from the verb to purse, in this application, the adjective pursy is probably formed.

Bulging, swelling, or puffing out; hence, puffy, short-winded, short-breathed.

I had a start out, and by chance set upon a fat steward, thinking his purse had been as pursy as his body.

The Puritan, Act i. sc. 4.

—Forgiue me this my vertue;

PUTTER. } but, (as a ram, qv.) to push or PUTTING, n. } drive forwards, which G. Douglas writes to put, (p. 300, l. 14.) And to show that put was anciently used as equivalent to push, Dr.
Jamieson quotes the passage given below, from Brunne's Account of the Raising of Stonehenge.
R. Gloucester writes it pult, which may with as good reason identify put with pull.

PUT

Put,—a very common word in our oldest writers, is of very extensive application to every kind and degree of motion. It has no cognate in the other northern languages. Unless it has, and it may have, its origin in the A. S. Bid-an, Ger.
Beit-en, by the change of b and d into their cognates p and t; and thus mean, to bide or stay, or cause to bide or stay; and thus further,—

To move into or out of place, to place, to move, or cause to be in any position, state, station, or situation, in any mode, manner, or condition.

It is used as our derivatives from the Lat.
Ponere and its compounds, with or without accompanying prepositions.

To appose,—to put or place to or near to.

To compose,—to put together.

To depose or deposit,—to put down.

To expose,—to put out, to put out before.

To impose,—to put upon.

To interpose,—to put between.

To oppose,—to put against.

To postpone,—to put back, behind, to defer.

To propose or purpose,—to put before; to offer; (met.) to offer, to present to the mind, to mean.

To repose or reposit,—to put away, to put by,
(in a place of rest or security.)

To suppose,—to put under, (met.)

To transpose,—to put across, to transfer.

Met.—to move, impel, induce; and, used with various other prepositions, has (met. and conse-quentially) a designation, which must be inferred from the context: as—to put on, to assume.

Glanvill writes put-pin; usually called push-pin.

To hys scaubert he pult ys hond, al preste a suerd he vond
Ther inne, thoru God y sond, no betere in lond.
R. Gloucester, p. 273.

Though this action of putrefaction comes the nearest to animal digestion, it so far differs from it that the salts and oils are only detained in the animal body so long as they remain benign and friendly to it; but, as soon as they putrefy entirely, are either thrown off or must produce mortal distempers.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 1.

The frequent repetition of aliment is not only necessary for repairing the fluids and solids of an animal body, but likewise to keep the fluids from the putrescent alkaline state which they would acquire by constant motion and attrition, without being dilated by a fresh emulsion of new chyle.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

How have I seen that poor fowl, after the patience of a painfull hatching, clocking her little brood together; and when she hath perceived the puttock hovering over her head, in a varied note calling them hastily under the wing of her protection.—Bp. Hall, Sol. 68.

— I chose an eagle,
And did auoyd a puttocke.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 2.

PUTTY. Fr. Potée, potin. Cotgrave calls potée, "brass, copper, tin, pewter, &c., burnt or calcinated." Putty, or pottain, or pot-brass, (see the quotations from Holland and Boyle,) seem all to mean the same thing.

A metallic mixture or composition used to give a polish, colour, or coating to pots; then applied to a similar composition used in the manufacture of glass; and, subsequently, (as now most usually,) to a composition used in fixing glass in window frames.

This care would bee had, that for to give unto this temperature the kind seasoning, as it were, which peculiarly it requireth, there would be gotten such pottain or old metall which is overworne, [æris collectanei, hoc est, ex usu, coempti,] and by ordinarie occupying and using to the hand, bright-shining, and as one would say tamed, made gentle and pliable.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 9.

The last temperature is that which in Latine they call ollaria, as one would say pot-brasse, for it taketh the name of that vessell [ollaria, vase nomen hoc dante] whereto it is most employed; and this is by tempering with every hundred pound weight of brasse three or four pound weight of argentine lead or tin.—Id. Ib. b. xxiv. c. 9.

The common putty that is sold and used so much in shops, instead of being, as it is pretended and ought to be, only the calx of tin, is by the artificers that make it, to save the charge of tin, made but of half tin and half lead, if not far more lead than tin.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 721.

That would go near to puzzle me.

Randolph. The Muse's Looking-glass, Act iii. sc. 4.

To the last puzzle propounded, whether these archei (or seminal forms) be so many sprigs of the common soul of the world, or particular subsistences of themselves; there is no great inconvenience in acknowledging that it may be either way.—More. An Appendix to Atheism, c. 11.

Hebrew, the general puzzler of old heads,
Which the gray dunce with pricks and comments reads,
And dubs himself a scholar by it, grew

The seven pyramids likewise, that are become wonders of the world; which, in how long a time, and with what difficultie they were brought up so high, Herodotus the writer sheweth: Towers they be, erected to such an height, as exceedeth the handyworke of man; of a huge breadth in the bottome, and rising to a most sharpe pointed top: which figure in Geometre is tearmed pyramis, for that to the forme of fire (τὸ πυρὸς,) as we say, it commeth to be small in the head, in fashion of a cone or pine apple: the greatnesse whereof, because in climbing up to an exceeding height, it groweth small by little and little, consumeth also the shaddowes by mechanicke reason.—*Holland. Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

Strabo takes notice of the judgment of Homer, in placing the mountains in this order; they all stand in Macedonia; Olympus is the largest, and therefore he makes it the basis upon which Ossa stands, that being the next to Olympus in magnitude, and Pelion being the least is placed above Ossa, and thus they rise pyramidally.—Pope. Hom. Od. b. xi. Note.

QUACK. Dut. Quacken, queken; Ger. Quacken; to make the noise of frogs, ducks, &c.; formed from the sound, as the Gr. Koax, Lat. Coaxare. In the second quotation from Chaucer, quakke (Tyrwhitt) seems to be put for an inarticulate noise, occasioned by any obstruction in the throat.

Ye queke yet, quod the duck, full well and fair,
There be mo sterres in the skie than a pair.

QUACKSALVER, v.

Dut. Quack-saluer; Ger. Quack-sal-ber; Sw. Quack-salwa. Properly, says Wachter, unguentarius in conditè et molestè vociferans, from quaken, to quack, (see ante,) and Ger. Salbe; Dut. Salve, Sw. Salwa, salve.

JUNIUS is inclined to think that the Goth. Q, supposed by some to be equivalent to the Lat. Q, or A. S. Cw or hw, was merely the A. S. Hw, or Eng. Wh. The English Saxons (says B. Jonson) knew not this halting q with her waiting woman u after her, but exprest quail by kuail, &c. &c. After the Latin words quality, quantity, (for instance,) were introduced into our language, the letter q was allowed to usurp the best of k's possessions in words of native growth. Wilkins observes that, being considered a compound of c and u, it is in many ancient books written without the u, as qis, qæ, qid. The Latin q has evidently the force of the Gr. K, and the diphthong kov, thus kovam, or cōam, is quam. And see QUALITY.

Quack, v.—to make a noisy crying or talking; to make noisy claims or pretensions.

Quacksalver,—one who cries salves or unguents, one who sells them.

Quackery is a common name for a common thing.

Cour. Tut, man, any quacksalving terms will serve for this purpose.—Middleton. A Mad World, my Masters! Act ii.

 Qualis, of that kind, degree, &c.; and hence, quality is applied to—

Any thing pertaining or belonging to, constituting or forming a constituent part or portion of, appropriated to; to the kind or sort, degree or rank, manner, state, condition, property; and also, emphatically, to high degree or rank, as people of quality.

Qualify,—to bestow or endow with qualities, (sc.) fit or suitable for the purpose; to fit, suit, or render fit or suitable; to empower; also to alter or change, to abate or reduce, the force of some qualities by the intermixture of others;
 and, thus, to modify or moderate, to abate, to mitigate.

Ye knowen all thilke couered qualitie,
 Of thinges, which that folke wondren at so,
 Whan they can nat construe how it may go.

Hales. Let. from Synod of Dort, Dec. 1618.

This form or archeus is a thing more simple and plain, and requires a more simple and plain qualification of the subject it works upon; to wit, that it be onely homogeneal and ductile, or yielding to the tender assaults of that substantial power of life that resides in it.

More. Antidote to Atheism, pt. i. c. 11.

Such who will forgive the use of our qualificatives (as but limping and lameness) will perchance not pardon the many blanks which occur in this book.

Fuller. General Worthies, c. 21.

It will concern you to use your utmost care and diligence to qualify yourselves for the receiving the fruits and benefits of these mercies and favours of Christ Jesus, and by this means to render them firm and sure; that is to say, effectual to the good of your souls.—Sharp. vol. vi. Ser. 16.

In the next place, as to that extermination and excision of the Canaanites, which carries so horrible an appearance of severity, we may find it qualifiable if we consider, that for the nature of the trespasses which procured it, they were insufferably heinous and abominable.

Barrow. vol. iii. Ser. 37.

Can he be thought a religious man, or a true Christian, that wants the two main qualifications that go to the making up a disciple of Christ; that is to say, faith and repentance.

Sharp. vol. i. Ser. 4.

But after you have thus far followed your own inventions in your several restrictions and qualifyings of an absolute command, there is still this invincible reason against them all.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 355.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea; and the power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject wherein that power is.

Locke. Of Hum. Underst. vol. i. b. ii. c. 8. s. 8.

The true reason of requiring any qualification with regard to property in voters, is to exclude such persons as are in so mean a situation that they are esteemed to have no will of their own.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

Fr. Quereller; It. Querelare; Low Lat. Querelari, querelas effundere; to pour forth complaints; more especially complaints, accusations in courts of justice, (Vossius, De Vitiis, p. 731.)

And hence—

To lay a complaint against; to litigate, to contend, to wrangle, to disagree, to dispute.

But the It. Querela, Fr. Querelle, are more probably (as the Sp. Guerilla, a little war, from guerra) diminutives of guerre, guerra, war. And hence to quarrel—

To contend, to contest, to dispute, to disagree, to squabble, to wrangle.

What might thou more haue doen than thou diddest, but if thou wouldest in a false quarrell haue been a stinking martire?—Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. i.

These women gone home glad enough,

QUARRY. "I know not whether from the Fr. Querir, Lat. Querere, to seek or search after," (Skinner.) Lye adds the conjecture of Kennet, from carry, the prey carried off. It seems more probably to be—

The prey sought, pursued, chased, hunted, aimed at.

As when Joue's harnesse-bearing bird from hye
Stoups at a flying heron with proud disdayne,
The stone dead quarrey falls so forcibly,
That it rebownds against the lowly playne,
A second fall redoubling backe agayne.

encampment; perhaps because formerly divided into quarters; hence quarters, applied to the station or lodgement of soldiers; and—

To live in the same quarters, to live as fellow-soldiers, sociably, amicably; whence quarter is further applied to good fellowship or companionship, friendliness, kindness, sympathy, or compassion; and to give quarter, is to give or grant mercy, to spare from slaughter.

This latter usage is, however, historically accounted for by De Brieux. (See in Menage.)
He says that quarter was the portion of pay, promised as ransom by soldiers or officers to their conquerors in battle; but he does not state of pay for what time, whether week, month, or a whole campaign.

QUASH, v. See TO CASH or CASHEER. From the Lat. Cassus, which signifies vain, useless, good for nothing, has been formed (says Case-neuve) the Bar. Lat. verb, Casso, cassare, cassian reddere; and thence the Fr. Casser, to destroy, to annul. And see Vossius, (De Vitiis, lib. iv. c. 3.)
To annul, to annihilate, to put an end to. See

QUASH, v. Dut. Quetsen; Ger. Quetschen; Sw. Quesa; A. S. Cwysan, to crush, to bruise, to squeeze, (i. e. squeeze, qv.) to burst asunder, (Somner.) Fr. Casser is derived by Caseneuve from quassare, frequentative of quater, to shake. The Lat. Quater and quassare are (Tooke) from quac- ian, to quake. Quash, in Piers Plouhman and Ray, is equivalent to quassare, i. e. to quake or shake. Quasse, in Gascoigne, seems to be to quaffe.

To beat down, to crush, to dash, to squeeze or press down.

QUATERNARY. } Fr. Quaternaire; Lat. Quaternarius.
QUATERNITY. }
Four; containing, consisting of four.

Luke was, by the consent of all the congregacions voyces, receiued to make vp that same holye and mysticall quaternitie, which Moyses in olde tyme limited out, whan he expounded vnto vs the fower fluddes or riuers welling vp out of one spryng in Paradise.—Udal. Luke, Pref.

So that their whole scale, of all that is above body, was indeed not a trinity, but a quaternity, or four ranks and degrees of beings one below another.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 557.

We come now to the quaternary, of which, besides what we noted already, there are four more titles not altogether inept or insignificant.

More. Philosophick Cabbala, c. 4. s. 1. App.

I perceive I need not mind you that the objections I made against the quaternary of elements and ternary of principles, needed not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 586.

QUATERNION, n. } Lat. Quaternio; the QUATERNION, v. } number four.
A company, of four in number.

Aire, and ye elements the eldest birth
Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run, Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Yea, the angels themselves, in whom no disorder is fear'd, as the apostle that saw them in his rapture describes, are distinguish'd and quaternion'd into their celestial prince-doms and satrapies, according as God himself hath writ his imperial decrees through the great provinces of heaven.

Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 1.

We know, then, according to our mock Anaxagoras, what goodness and justice are, as certainly as what wisdom and power are, since this quaternion of attributes are all known by the same means, and by no other.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. App.

QUATRAINE. Fr. Quatrain. A stanza of four verses, (Cotgrave.)

I have chosen to write my poem [Annus Mirabilis] in quatrains or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judged them more noble and of greater dignity both for the sound and number than any other verse in use amongst us.—Dryden. A Letter to Sir R. Howard.

QUERPO. Sp. En cuerpo; Lat. Corpus; a man without a cloak, or a woman without a vail or scarf. It seems applied to,— Any dress that fits tight to and exposes the shape of the body; any slight covering.

— But his linen was not
So handsome altogether as the Turks;
In quirpo with a crab-tree cudgel too,
Walking and canting broken Dutch for farthings.
The Gamester, Act iii.

He, [John Owen] instead of being a grave example to the University, scorned all formality, undervalued his office by going in quirpo like a young scholar, with powdered hair, snakebone bandstrings, &c.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

They mostly had short hair, which at this time was commonly called the Committee cut, and went in quirpo in a shabbed condition, and looked rather like prentices, or antiquated schoolboys, than academians or ministers.
Id. Fasti Oxon. vol. ii.

But he soon strips Moses of his mission, and leaves him

Hall. Edw. IV. an. 17.

Hither sad lutes they nightly bring,
And gently touch each querulous string,
Till that with soft harmonious numbers
They think th' have woo'd her into slumbers.
Cartwright. Corinna's Tomb.

To complain in print of the multitude of books, seems to me a self-accusing vanity, whilst the querulous reprehenders add to the cause of complaint, and transgress themselves in that, which they seem to wish amended.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, Pref.

And smit with love of poesy and prate.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

The query that I would propose to you to put to yourselves is this: What sort of life doth so clear, so full, so excellent a discovery of God's will for the salvation of mankind, as we have by Jesus Christ, in comparison of what the world had before; what sort of life, I say, doth it require of all those who have the knowledge of it?—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 9.

When a patient or querent came to him [Dr. Napier] he all fines, taxes, and other collections of money.

North. Plutarch, p. 93.

He whom an honest questorship had endeared to the Sicilians, was not more by them importun'd against Verres, than the favourable opinion which I had among many who honour ye, and are known and respected by ye, loaded me with entreaties and persuasions that I would despair to lay together that which just reason should bring into my mind, toward the removal of an undeserved thralldom upon learning.—Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

QUESTUARY, adj. Lat. Quæstuaris, ad quæstum pertinens; of or pertaining to gain.

Seeking, pursuing, gain or profit.

For although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals and natural speculators are of another belief: conceiving the stones which bear this name [load stone] to be a mineral concretion; not to be found in animals, but in fields.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 13.

Although Gerson and Dominicus à Soto are ashamed of these prodigious indulgences, and suppose that the Pope's questuaries did procure them, yet it must not be so disowned.—Bp. Taylor. A Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. s. 3.

QUEUE. Fr. Cue, or queue, a tail; from the Lat. Cauda. See CUE.

In making or mending, as needeth thy ditch,
Get set to quicks it, learn cunningly which.
Tusser. Husbandry. January.

And as I was creeping thorow the bushes I sawe an Indian basket hidden, which was the refiners' basket; for I found in it his quicksilver, salt-peter, and diuers thinges for the triall of metals, and also the dust of such ore as he had refined.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 646.

That so at the least, dulnes being auoided, thei might bee made more prenaunte and quicke witted to those thynges whiche he should saie vnto them.
Udal. John, c. 14.

But Calidore, that was more quicke of sight
And nimbler-handed then his enemye, Prevented him before his stroke could light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

Nature groan'd out her last, when he did fall
Whose influence gave quicking to us all.

King. Hamlet, this deede of thine, for thine especial safety
Which we do tender, as we deerely greeue
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fierie quickness. Id. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 3.

I think it manifest that sympathy and antipathy, love and enmity, aversation, fear, and the like, are notable whetters and quickness of the spirit of life in all animals.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 12. s. 12.

But he, the more outrageous and bold,
Sternely did bid him quikely thence avaunt,
Or deare aby. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

Others think this heat to proceed from quickness, which by common experience we find to heat any waters cast upon't, and also to kindle any combustible substance put upon it.—Howell, b. i. s. 6. Let. 35.

Scarse had he saide, when hard at hand they spy
That quicksand nigh with water covered;
But by the checked wave they did descry
It plaine, and by the sea discoloured:
It called was the quickness of unthrifty hed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Without the hall, and close vpon the gate,
A goodly orchard ground was situate,
Of neare ten acres; about which was led
A loftie quicks. Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

He [Mr. Hobbs] seeing so little into the nature of spirits, that defect is compensated with an extraordinary quickness
in discerning of the best and most warrantable wayes of solving all phaenomena from the ordinary allowed properties of matter.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 1.

The tabor striking up, if thou hast in thee any country quicksilver, thou hadst rather be at the sport than hear thereof.—Drayton. Pastorals, To the Reader.

Scarse had he seen, but seiz'd with sudden smart,
Stung to the quik, he felt it at his heart.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

When the scripture saith, that we are all dead in trespasses and sins, and that God by Christ hath *quicken*ed us, and created us again to good works; these words are not to be strictly understood, but only metaphorically; here is neither a proper death, nor a proper quickness, nor, last of all, a proper creation.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

Bear me, some God! oh quikly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense.
Pope. Donne, Sat. 4.

If they bring in their verdict quik with child, (for barely, with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient,) execution shall be staid generally till the next session.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 31.

QUID, i. e. Cud, (qv.)

QUIDDIT. } Fr. Quidditatif, quidditative, QUIDDITY. } fraught with quiddities, (Cot-grave.) From the Low or School Lat. Quidditas.

And that thou canst not possibly doe onles (as I warned the before) thou reiecte the chattering vayne byblebale of those mē that goe about to bryng themselves in a false estimacion of knowledge, by reason of humayne questions and sophisticall quiddities.—Udal. 1 Tim. c. 6.

Hys workinge toles are such vnsauerye sophismes, problemes, clenches, corolaries, quiddities, subtiltyes, seconde intentions, intryncall moodes, wyth other prodigiouse sor-ceries.—Bale. Image, pt. ii. Pref.

Sir Oliv. How's this? will the widow and you keep

What trick? what quiddit? what fegare is this?
Barry. Merry Tricks, Act v. sc. 1.

And where th' offender's maintenance was great,
Their working heads they busily did beat,
By some strange quiddit or some wrested clause
To find him guilty of the breach of laws.
Drayton. The Owl.

Which infatuation hath chiefly proceeded from scholas-ticks who have been so intemperate in the use of these words that they could not make a rational discourse of any thing, though never so small, but they must stuff it with their quiddities, entities, essences, hæcceities, and the like.

Fr. Quiet, quiétude, quiét- ism; It. Quiescere, quiete, quietar; Sp. Quieto, quieto; Lat. Quiescere, quies. From Gr. Kiō (hoc est κειῶναι, quod notat cubo) we may form quies, and, thence, quiesco, to lie down, (Vos- sius.) From Gr. ἡσυχία, to cause to cease, stop, or stay, comes the noun ἡσυχία, (pausa, a pause or stop;)
whence the Lat. Quies, (Lennepe.) Quiescent,— Resting, reposing; ceasing, stopping, or staying from motion or action;
lying at rest, in stillness, tranquillity, calmness, peace. And quiet,— Still, tranquil, calm, peaceful.

rowes of marriage, but so quyetously content themselves therwith as though they were clerely without them.
Id. Apologie, fol. 66.

— Thus leave
Thee, native soile, these happy walks and shades,
Fit haunt of Gods? where I had hope to spend,
Quiet though sad, the respite of that day
That must be mortal to us both.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. xi.

When thus the field was voided all away,
And all things quieted, the elfin knight,
Weary of toile and travell of that day,
Caused his pavilion to be richly pight
Before the city-gate in open sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

And yf ye wyne this maystery,
I wyll obaye you quietly;
And sure I thynke that quietnesse
In any man is great riches.—Heywood. The Four P's.

But let the night be calme and *quies*some.
Spenser. Epithalamion.

From which equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, which is the proper alloy of fervent blood, I am wont to hope (where I see it) will flow a future quietude and serenitude in the affections, and a discreet sweetness and moderation in the manners.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 79.

I hope to put her off with half the sum;
That's truth: some younger brother would ha' thank'd me,
And given my quietus.—The Gamester, Act v.

When he himselte might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin?—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

Though it move, its motion must needs be as insensible as if it were quiescent.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 9.

And 'tis not unlikely that he [Adam] had as clear a perception of the earth's motion as we think we have of its quiescence.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 1.

There is no difficulty at all in conceiving that the insensible particles of a body, which were before quiescent, may be put into motion.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 46.

Secure the sacred quiet of thy mind,
And keep the sanctions nature has design'd.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

The tide of business, like the running stream,
Is sometimes high, and sometimes low
A quiet ebb, or a tempestuous flow,
And always in extreme.—Id. Horace, b. iii. Ode 29.

We do not find that, in the controversies which arose in the ancient church about matters of faith, the guides of the church ever made use of this argument of the church's infallibility for the quieting and ending of them.
Sharp, vol. vii. Ser. 3.

But now in Italy and Rome itself (the state of the beast) there be risen up a sect of Quietists, (who are not likely to deserve that name long.)—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 319.

So some of old imagined, who pretended that out of meer kindness to the Deity they gave him his quietus est, and took from him, as much as in them lay, the care and government of the world.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 10.

If the temper and constitution were cold and phlegmatic, their religion has sunk into quietism; if bilious or sanguine, it has flamed out into all the frenzy of enthusiasm.
Warburton. Alliance between Church & State, b. i.

QUILL. } From the Lat. Caulis, a stalk, or QUILT, v. } from calamus, a reed. See Skinner QUILT, n. } and Junius.
It is, perhaps, from the Fr. Aiguille; It. Agùglia, gùglia, acicula, acus; a point.

A quill is applied to the full-grown, hard-pointed feather of a bird; to the pricks of the porcupine; and to other things similarly formed.

And to quilt,—to prick or stitch with a pointed instrument or needle; and—

A quilt,—any thing—a coverlet—so stitched.

Yee that frequent the hills and highest holtes of all, Assist mee with your skilful quilles
and listen when I call.

Turberville. Upon the Death of Elizabeth Arhundle.

Then he would have him bound to bring at such times as tributes should be paid, a quill full of lice, saying, hee would have none free but himselfe.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 469.

In their winter, which is our May, the men weare quilted gownes of cotton like to our mattresses, and quilted caps like to our great grocers' morters, with a slit to look out at, and so tied downe beneath their eares.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 256.

Col. Of muses, Hobbinoll, I conne no skill,
For they bene daughters of the highest Jove,
And holden scorn of homely shepherds quill.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. June.

I will but sweep the way with a few notes, and these only touching the duke's own deportment in that island, the proper subject of my quill.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 226.

The fashion of play-making I can properly compare to nothing so naturally as the alteration in apparel: for in time of the great-crop-doublet, your huge bombasted plays, quilted with mighty words to lean purpose, was only then in fashion.—Middleton. The Roaring Girl. To Play Readers.

He, laid, and couerd well with curled wooll,
Wouen in silke quills: all night emploid his minde
About the taske that Pallas had design'd.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

Out of the bed the other fair hand was
On a green satin quilt, whose perfect white Look'd like a dazie in a field of grass,

And shew'd like unmelt snow unto the sight.

Suckling. A Supplement of Verses of W. Shakespeare.

Launch out with freedom, flatter him enough;
Fear not—all men are dedication proof.
Be bolder yet, you must go farther still,
Dip deep in gall thy mercenary quill.

Gay, Ep. 4.

What they called his cravat was a little piece of white linen, quilted with great exactness, and hanging below his chin about two inches.—Tatler, No. 257.

There must thou wake perforce thy Doric quill.

Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands.

—Alas!

He picks clean teeth, and, busy as he seems
With an old tavern quill, is hungry yet!

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

QUIPLET. Fr. Quolibet, i. e. quidlibet; what you please. See QUIP, and QUODLIBET.

That of which you may make what you please;
a fallacious subtilty; a nice distinction, a nicety.

In God's name let it weave out again; let not human *quill*ets keep back divine authority.

Milton. Of Reformation in England.

Why might not that bee the scull of a lawyer? where be his quiddits now? his *quill*ets? his cases? his tenures, and his tricks?—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

Ply her with love-letters and billets,
And bait them well, for quirks and *quill*ets,
With trains t' inveigle and surprise
Her heedless answers and replies.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

QUINARY. Lat. Quinarius, quinque continens; containing or consisting of five.

They did in all probability, for this very reason, quite innovate, change, and pervert the whole Cabala, and no longer acknowledge a trinity, but either a quaternary or a quinary, or more of divine hypostases.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 625.

But yet upon this Aristotelean conceit, that there are four, they will have the Æther a fifth, and from thence call the quinary Nequeia, as distributing the world into these five orders, Earth, Water, Aire, Fire, Æther.

More. Defence of the Philos. Cabala, App. c. 4. s. 5.

QUINCE. Fr. Coing; It. Cotogna; Lat. Cotoneum, cytonium, cydonium malum; a fruit so called, from Cydon, an isle near Lesbos, or the town of Crete, so called.

O mossie quince hanging by your stalke,
The whiche no man dare plucke away nor take.

Chaucer. A Ballad on Woman's Chastity.

Quynces be cold and dry; eaten afore meale they bynde and restraine the stomake.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 14.

QUINCH, v. Said to be the same word as quich; but more probably it is wink, wince, winst; A. S. Ge-winc-ian, gwinc, or cwinc-ian, to wink; applied to the motion of the eyelid generally.

To move to and fro, (sc.) out of the reach of harm; to flinch or shrink from.

But Cato did abide it a long time, and never *quinc*hed for it, nor shewed countenance of fear.—North. Plutarch, p. 638.

Thereupon (I purpose) to bestow all my souldiers in such sort as I have done, that no part of all that realme shall be able to dare to quinch.—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

QUINCUNX. } Lat. Quincunx. If (says QUINCUNCIAL. } Vossius) you cut X into two QUINCUNCIALLY. } parts, the upper part will be the letter V, which was used as the note or sign quincuncis sive quinque assium; and trees so disposed or arranged as to represent this figure were called a quincunx. Others say because quinque uncia were denoted thus, X.

But not to look so high as heaven or the single quincunx of the Hyades upon the neck of Taurus, the triangle, and remarkable Crusero about the foot of the Centaur; rudiments there are hereof in subterraneous concretions, and bodies in the earth.—Brown. Urne Burial, c. 3.

Now for the order of setting trees either in groves, hop-yards, or vineyards, we ought to follow the usuall manner of chequer row, called quincunziall, which is not so common, but it is also as necessarie.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 11.

It is no wonder that this quincunziall order was first and still affected as gratefull unto the eye: for all things are seen quincuncially.—Brown. Urne Burial, c. 4.

Before them obliquely, in order of quincunx, were pits dug three foot deep, something narrower at the bottom than the top.—Bladen. Cæsar. Commentaries, b. vii. c. 31.

Of generals, he's listed in 't.)

Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

QUINTAIN. Fr. Quintaine, a quintane (or whintane) for country youths to run at; It. Quintana or chintana; Low Lat. Quintana. Much has been written about the origin of this word. Some suppose it to be from one Quintus; others, with great appearance of probability, from the Lat. Contus, a pole. See the French and Italian etymologies of Menage, and also Du Cange and Spelman in v. Quintana.

Whilst dance about the may-pole is begun,
When, if need were, they could at quintain run.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

—My better parts
Are all throwne downe, and that which here stands vp
Is but a quintine, a meere liewlesse blocke.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 2.

Acci. At quintain he,
In honour of this bridaltee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee.

B. Jonson. Love's Welcome at Welbeck.

Pawne thou no glove for challenge of the deed,
Nor make thy quintaine others armed head
T'enrich the waiting herald with thy shame,
And make thy losse the scornful scaffold's game.

Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 4.

QUINTESENCE. } Fr. Quintessence; It.
QUINTESSENCED. } Quintessenza; Lat.
QUINTESSENTIAL. } Quinta essentia, a fifth essence. (See the quotation from Holland.) Also applied as the French,—

The virtue, force, or spirit of a thing extracted.

Aristoteles of Stagira, the son of Nichomachus, hath put down for principles these three; to wit, a certaine forme called entelechia, matter, privation; for elements, foure, and for a fifth, quintessence, the heavenly body which is immutable.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 662.

Therefore in the art of man stood the quintessence and ruling skill of all prosperous government, either peaceable, or military.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

QUIBBLE, n. } lash, to cut, with some sharp QUIBBLING, n. } or smart saying, with some QUIBBLE. } sarcasm; to scoff, to taunt.
(See the quotation from Lyly.) And quibble, a diminutive, q.d. quipple; a sharp or smart play upon words, a quick, sharp, or acute elusion or evasion by verbal subtilty.

But quibble is more probably a corruption of quidlibet; (also corrupted into quillet, qv.;) and quip, as a further corruption of quibble, is much more satisfactorily accounted for. (See also QUODLIBET.) All these words we seem to owe to the subtle trifling of the schools.

This was a good quip that he gave unto the Jewes, which were ready to speake of other men's faults, but of their owne faults they made no mention.
Latimer. Ser. Rom. xiii. an. 1552.

— And still, when she complains,
The more he laughs, and does her closely quip
To see her sore lament and bite her tender lip.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

If you will learne to rebell against princes, closely to carry treasons, to consume treasures, to practice idlenesse, to sing and talke of filthy love and venery; to deride, quippe, scorne, &c., you need not goe to any other schooles: for all these good examples may you see painted before your eyes in enterludes and playes.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act viii. sc. 6.

Manes. We cynicks are mad fellows; didst thou not find I did quip thee?

Psyl. No verily: why, what's a quip?
Manes. We great girders call it a short saying of a sharp wit, with a bitter sense in a sweet word.
Lyly. Alexander & Campaspe, Act iii. sc. 2.

The pretty girles and quips they gave to others, were of no less force then the sharpest words and admonitions that otherwise could be given them.—North. Plutarch, p. 40.

Fac. Shee lies. This is some trick.
Come, leave your quibbles, Dorothee.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act iv. sc. 7.

O. Small-shanks. We old men have our crotchets, our conundrums,
Our figures, quirks and quibbles,
As well as youth.—Barry. Ram Alley, Act iii. sc. 1.

The atheists here can only smile, or make faces; and show their little wit, in quibbling upon nunc-stans, or a standing now and eternity.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 645.

Yet quibblers in the court had leave to prate:
Insidious jesters, and unpleasant fools,
A corporation of dull punning drolls.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

As a real difficulty requires sense and criticism to resolve it, an imaginary one may be well enough managed by a quibble.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. Notes.

which is of a more soft and easie sound. And see the quotation from B. Jonson in v. Hur.

Rh or hr, the correspondent mute to this, is made by a forcible emission of the breath through the instruments of speech in the same position as for the letter r, but without any vocal sound.

impōstors, (as scripture was once quoted by the Devil.)
South, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

Soon as the short-liv'd tempest was yspent,
Steam'd from the jaws of vext Avernus' hole,
And hush'd the hubbub of the rabblement,
Sir Industry the first calm moment stole.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

The mystagogue taught them, that Jupiter, Mercury, Bacchus, Venus, Mars, and the whole rabble of licentious deities, were only dead mortals; subject, in life, to the same passions and infirmities with themselves; but having been,
on other accounts, benefactors to mankind, grateful posterity had deified them, and, with their virtues, had indis-creetly canonized their vices.

is peculiarly used of dogs, (Vossius). Chaucer uses the adjective rabiate,—

Virulent, violent, furious; ravering.

Ah ye Jewes, worse than dogges rabiate,
What moued you thus cruelly him to array.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

When my wayward breath is flying,
He calls home my soul from dying,
Strokes and tames my soul from grief,
And does woo me into life.

RACE. Fr. Race, racine; It. Razza; Sp.
Raça, from the Lat. Radix, a root; which Vossius derives from the Gr. ῥαδιξ, a branch. See RA-DICATE.

The root; the origin whence any thing rises or issues; the lineage, family, kindred, breed, or generation; the course or progress, process or procedure. See RACE, n. and v., and RACE, RACY.
Race of ginger,—Sp. Rayz de gengibre; Lat.
Radix zinziberis.

For of each sinne it is the roote,
Unlefull lust, though it be soote
And of all euill the racine.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And thou, faire ymp, sprong out from English race.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

And underneath him his courageous steed,
The fierce Spumador, trode them downe like docks;
The fierce Spumador borne of heavenly seed;
Such as Laomedon of Phœbus' race did breed.

2. Car. I haue a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger, to be delivered as farre as Charing Crosse.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

Birds are of swifter motion then beasts: for the flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 681.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to assail and invade the ancient and indubitable patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant: shall he sit down and not put himself in defence.

Bacon. On a War with Spain.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin itself, which was the duke's undoubted right.—Id. Ib.

There may be other forms wholly irregular that may, for aught I know, have more beauty than any of the others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgement in the contrivance, which may reduce many disagreeing parts into some figure which shall yet upon the whole be very agreeable.—Sir W. Temple. On Gardening.

There dwells below a race of demi-gods,
Of nymphs in waters, and of fawns in woods:
Who, though not worthy yet in heaven to live,
Let them at least enjoy that earth we give.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

RACE, n. } Skinner says, — perhaps from RACE, v. } the Dut. Rannen, q. d. rance; others RA' CER. } from the Islandic Raas, of a similar meaning; it is not improbably the same word as the preceding, applied, from the consequential usage, course, progress, procedure, to—

A course or progress, in contest or rivalry; motion of swiftness or speed; a foot-race, horse-race, boat-race.

For chaste Diane that hunted still the chase,
And all her maids that sue her in the race,
With fair bowes bent, and arrows by their side,
Can say that thou in this hast falsly lide.

Behold the prizes, valiant Greeks, decreed
To the brave rulers of the *race*ing steed.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finned racers of the flood.

Dorset. To Mr. E. Howard.

While with sure skill, though with inferior steeds,
The knowing racer to his end proceeds;
Fix'd on the goal his eye foreruns the course,
His hand unerring steers the steady horse,
And now contracts or now extends the rein,
Observing still the foremost on the plain.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

He that would win the race must guide his horse
Obedient to the customs of the course;
Else, though unequalled to the goal he flies,
A meaner than himself shall gain the prize.

Cowper. Truth.

Less swiftly to the goal a racer flies;
Less swift a bird on pinions cleaves the skies.

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. vi.

RACE. } Also a consequential usage of RA'CY. } race, radix; and applied to—RA' CINESS. } A taste or flavour, savouring of the right vintage, of the right kind or sort;
showing its root or origin; peculiar to its kind.

Such comfort to us here your letter gives,

RACEMATION. Lat. Racemus; a bunch or cluster.

Formation of, or into, bunches or clusters.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 28.

RACK, n. A rack of hay, (in which is put) a quantity of hay, collected, drawn, raked together. See RAKE.

Provided alwaies that hey-seeds, flowers and all, be sowed upon it, such as be found in hey-lofts and ricks, or els, that shed out from the racke into the crib or maunger.

Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 28.

RACK, i. e. rock, the part of the spinning machine covered by the wool that is to be spun. See ROCK.

Thus while she sings the sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack and fill the reel.

Dryden. Virgil, Georgic 4.

RACK, v. } That which is reeked. (See RACK, n. } REEK.) A. S. Rec, smoke, steam, reak or reek; rec-an, to smoke, reeke, or cast forth vapours: and—

To rack, to reek,—to move like vapour or smoke.

Rack, n.—vapour, steam, exhalation, fume.

The character in Tyrannick Love is a spirit of the clouds.

The commentators have written very largely and very erroneously upon the passages quoted below from Shakespeare. See their Notes, and Tooke, vol. ii. p. 389, et seq., and Dr. Jamieson, in v. Rak. The commentators have fallen into the common mistake of including a meaning expressed by the context in their explanation of the word; and were thus entirely diverted from its etymology, and consequently from its intrinsic signification.

Ant. That which is now a horse, euen with a thought
The racke distimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 12.

— These our actors
As I foretold you) were all spirits, and
Are melted into ayre, into thin ayre;
And, like the baselesse fabricke of this vision,
The clowd-capt towres, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemne temples, the great globe it selfe,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this insubstantiall pageant faded,
Leave not a racke behind.—Id. The Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face.

Id. Son. 33.

The winds in the upper regions which move the clouds above, (which we call the rack), and are not perceived below, pass without noise.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 115.

A thousand leagues I haue cut through empty air,
Far swifter than the sayling rack that gallops
Upon the wings of angry winds, to seek thee.

Beaum. & Fletch. Women pleased, Act iv. sc. 1.

— Shall I stray
In the middle air, and stay
The sayling rack.—Id. Faithful Shepherdess, Act v. sc. 1.

Dam. In the bright moon-shine, while winds whistle loud,
Tivy, tivy, tivy, we mount and we fly,
All racking along in a downy white cloud.

Dryden. Tyrannick Love, Act iv. sc. 1.

As when loud Boreas, with his blustering train, Stoops from above, incumbent on the main;
Where'er he flies he drives the rack before,
And rolls the billows on the Egean shore.

Id. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xii.

— The hooded Erne
Climbs on strong winds the storm, and screaming high,
Rides the dim rack that sweeps the darken'd sky.

Leyden. Scenes of Infancy.

RACK, v. } Dut. Racken; Ger. Rachen;

or inflict, to punish, to distress or distract.

To afflict or distress; to pain, to torture, to torment; to distract, to stretch, to strain; and, hence, to draw off, (sc.) liquors, or the pure portion from the foul or lees. See the quotation from Bacon.

He was racked and miserably tormented, to the intent he should either chaunge his opinion, or confesse other of his profession.—Fox. A Table of French Martyrs, an. 1551.

Though Mynos hath assignde
Prometheus to the rack,
With hande and foote ystretched awide till all his lirmes doe crack.

Turberville. Of the Torments of Hell and the Paines of Loue.

What doubt is there but that the sight of this place doth call our thoughts to appear at the court of affection, held by that racking stewafd—remembrance.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Than is good to vse small white wine, as racked renishe wine, &c.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 25.

His torments and rackings were sore through the setting on of Maillard and other Sorbonistes.

Fox. A Table of French Martyrs, an. 1551.

— Wake! leaue this withdrawne room;
That now your eyes may see, at length, though late,
The man return'd, which all the heauy date
Your woes haue rack't out, you haue long'd to see—Vlysses is come home!—Chapman. Homer. Ody. b. xxiii.

It is in common practice to draw wine or beer from the lees, (which we call racking), whereby it will clarify much the sooner.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 305.

Rack the one vessell from the lees, and poure the lees of the racked vessell into the unracked vessell, and see the effect.—Id. Ib. § 306.

— For it so falls out,
That what we haue we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but, being lack'd and lost,
Why then we racke the value, then we finde
The vertue that possession would not shew vs
Whiles it was ours.

Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc. 1.

Then him to ground he cast, and rudely hayld,
And both his hands fast bound behind his backe,
And both his feet in fetters to an yron racke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

Lessius enjoynes, so much at supper, &c. ribbe of a racke of mutton.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 75.

I abhor such phanaticall phantasms, such insociable and poynt deuise companions, such rackers of ortographie, as to speake dout fine, when he should say doubt.

Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 1.

From the concurring language of scripture and antiquity you find it necessary to say as we say, and are afterwards to rack and strain invention to find out some subtle and surprising meaning for it.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii.

As fortune would, (his fortune came though late,)
He took possession of his just estate;
Nor rack'd his tenants for increase of rent,
Nor liv'd too sparing, nor too largely spent.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Little do such men know the toil, the pains,
The daily, nightly racking of the brains,
To range the thoughts, the matter to digest,
To cull fit phrases, and reject the rest.

Churchill. Gotham, b. ii.

Once when the dukes of Exeter and Suffolk, and other ministers of Henry IV., had laid a design to introduce the civil law into this kingdom as the rule of government, for the beginning thereof they erected a rack for torture, which was called in derision the duke of Exeter's daughter, and still remains in the tower of London.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 25.

Rack-rent is only a rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3.

RA'CKET, n. } Fr. Raquette; It. Racchetta; RA'CKET, v. } Sp. Raqueta. Menage,—from the Lat. Rete; thus rete, reticum, retica, reticetta, retiquetta, rehetta, raketta, raquetta: it is more probably a dim. from wric-an, to rack, affligere, to dash against, to strike or beat against; and applied to—

A game in which balls are struck or beaten; to the instrument with which they are struck; and further, to the noise, clamour, bustle of the game. And the verb,—

To dash, strike, or beat; to drive about with noise, bustle, confusion.

And though I might, yet I would nat do so,
But canst thou plaien raket to and fro,
Nettle in, dock out, now this, now that, Pandare?

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

Ye wete well ladie eke (quod I) that I haue not plaid raket nettle in, docke out.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. i.

There's thy fellow-pretence, as good a gentleman born as thou art; nay, and better mean'd. But does he pump it or racket it?—Eastward Hoe, Act i. sc. 1.

The world a tennis-court, the rackets fates,
Great kings are balls when God will tosse their states.

Stirling. Domes-day. The First Houre.

[The king] answered that before he had ended with him and his father he purposed, by God's ayde, to tosse as many balles of yron with him, which ye best racket he had should not be hable to resist or returne.—Grafton. Hen. V. an. 2.

Thus, like a tennis-ball, is poor man racketed from one temptation to another, till, at last, he hazard eternal ruin.

Dr. Hewyt. Nine Sermons, (1658 or 1659.) p. 60.

Ambition hath removed her lodging and lives the next door to Faction, where they keep such a racket that the whole parish is disturbed, and every night in an uproar.

Swift.

Company and cards at home, parties by land and water abroad, and what they call doing something, that is racketing about from morning to night, are occupations I find that wear out my spirits, especially in a situation where one might sit still and be alone with pleasure.
Gray, Let. 38. To Dr. Clarke.

RA'DDLE. So pronounced for wrathel, the dim. of wrath, i.e. wrethed.

A raddle hedge is a hedge of pleached or plashed, or turned or wreathed twigs or boughs. See Tooke.

In old times the houses of the Britons were slightly set vp with a few posts and many radels.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 12.

RA'DIATE, v. Lat. Radiare; Fr. Radioux, radiation; It. Radiare, from radius; Gr. ῥαδός, virga, a rod, first applied to a measuring rod, to any thing similar, the spokes of a wheel, the bone of the arm, the lines which the sun emits. The Gr. ῥαδός, from ῥαδω-ειν, to cut off; for it is a long, slender branch cut from a tree, (Martinius.) See IRRADIATE.

To throw forth, eject, or emit, to surround or encircle with,—rays (of light); to shine, enlighten, or illuminate, to brighten, give brightness, splendour, brilliancy.

The Lord, of his merciful goodnesse, hath of late sente out the clere radiant sunnebeames of his holy woordes and veritie to shine ouer all Christen regions.
Udal. Preface to Queen Katherine.

After this Jonas descended and went downe a lyttell from the citie, and made him a shadowing place for his defence againste the radiante heate of the sonne in the syde of an hyll.—Fisher. The Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. iii.

A certeine vessel finellie and subtiltie made of the pretious stone onychinus, so radiantlie wrought, that in it appeared the liuelie corne growing, and men's images walking, &c.
Fox. Martyrs, an. 927.

That (with the repercussion of the air)
Shook the great eagle sitting in his chair;
Which from the mountain (with a radiant eye)
Brav'd the bright cressit of the glorious sky.
Drayton. The Owl.

— She shin'd in an attire
That cast a radiance past the ray of fire.
Chapman. Homer. Hymne to Venus.

Vices in kings are like those spots the moon
Bears in her body, which so plain appear
To all the world: so virtues shine more clear
In them, and radiate like the sun at noon.
Howell. Verses. Pref. to Lord Herbert's Hen. VIII.

So it [sound] paralleleth in so many other things with the sight, and radiation of things invisible.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 125.

We have also perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights, and radiations, and of all colours.
Id. New Atlantis, p. 28.

His radious head with shameful thorns they tear.
Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Light may be considered either, first, as it radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes; and thus we see luminous bodies themselves, as the sun, or a flame, &c.; or, secondly, as it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture by the rays of light reflected from them to our eyes.
Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Ausonius, which I was formerly surprised to meet with in the description of a bird.
Addison. Ancient Medals.

— Not so the boy;
He wondering views the bright enchantment bend,
Delightful, o'er the radiant fields, and runs
To catch the falling glory.
Thomson. Spring.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem, and through the dark
A moving radiance twinkles.
Id. Summer.

See how the moon through all th' unclouded sky
Spreads her mild radiance, and descending dews Revive the languid flowers.—Johnson. Irene, Act v. sc. 1.

Our hearts frequently warmed in this manner by the contact of those whom we wish to resemble, will undoubtedly catch something of their way of thinking, and we shall receive in our own bosoms some radiation at least of their fire and splendour.—Reynolds, Dis. 6.

RA'DICAL, adj. Fr. Radical; It. Radicale; Sp. Radical; Lat. Radicari, from radix, radicis, a root; from the Gr. ῥαδix, a branch, (Vossius;) as the upper part of the tree spreads itself in branches, so the lower disperses in fibres through the earth. See ERADICATE, and RACE.

To root or enroot, to fix, to infix, as the root in the earth, firmly, deeply; to plant, to implant.

The which [rācor] betwene no creatures can be more vehement then betwene bretheren, especially when it is firmly radicate.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 17.

Yet often remembrance to them of theyr astate maye happen to radicate in theyr hartes intollerable pryde, the moste dangerous poyson to noblenes.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 4.

The naturall heate and humour callyd radicall is the base or foundation wheypon the lyfe of mā standeth, and that fayling, lyfe falleth in ruine, and the body is dissolved.
Id. The Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 12.

The more you take away of her ranke and superfluous wood, the better will she employ the radicall sap and moisture to fructifie and yeeld good store of grapes.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

In all which, as Severinus conceiveth, there may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, which contain the radicality and power of different forms.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

We have an ordinary salute in English, God bless you; and tho' the word be radically derived from the Dutch word, yet it would bear good sense, and be very pertinent to this purpose, if we would fetch it from the French word blesser, which is to hurt.
Howell. Letters, b. i. s. 6. To Sir E. S. Kt. Let. 55.

They that were to plant a church were to deal with men of several and distant affections, and tempers and interests, an heterogeneous body made up of a multitude of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits, and to each of these some proper application was to be made by those that came on Christ's errand to cure their souls.—*Hammond. Some of them [words which are commonly called ad-verbs] may be periphrastically expressed by radicals.
Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 4.

But are habits to be introduced at three hours' warning? Are radical diseases so suddenly removed? A mountebank may promise such a cure, but a skilful physician will not undertake it.—Dryden. Æneis, Ded.

He knew a physician who constantly cured within two or three fits all agues, whether recent or radicated, in persons of all ages, sexes, and complexions indiscriminately, with one single outward application to the patient's wrists.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 245.

No; you may be assured they [our bad inclinations] will struggle for their lives before they give up the ghost; and if they are deeply radicated will not be torn from their roots without a great deal of time and labour.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

Time should not weaken or diminish, but rather confirm and radicate in us the remembrance of God's goodness, to render it, as it doth gold and wine, more precious, and more strong.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Every pious action leaves a certain tincture or disposition upon the soul, which, being seconded by actions of the same nature, whether by the superaddition of new degrees or a more radicate fixation of the same, grows at length into a habit or quality of the force and energy of a second nature.
South. Sermons.

Such a remedy might have wrought a radical cure of the evil that threatens our constitution; whereas it is much to be apprehended, even from experience, that all others are merely palliative.—Bolingbroke. Dis. upon Parties, Let. 18.

Radicie denotes that part of the seed of a plant, which upon its vegetation, becomes a little root.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary, in v.

It is not, therefore, from a sense of dignity, but from the danger of radicating that false sentiment in the breasts of the enemy, that I think, under the auspices of this declaration, we cannot with the least hope of a good event, or indeed with any regard to the common safety, proceed in the train of this negotiation.—Burke. Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

RA'DISH. Fr. Radis, from the Lat. Radix, a root. In Gr. ῥαδix was the name of this esculent root.

Radishe rootes haue the vertu to extenuate or make thyn, and also to warme.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 16.

Praxagoras is of judgement, that radishes should be given for to eat unto them that are troubled with the iliacke passion, to wit, the paine and wringing of the small guts.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 4.

RAG

RAFF. Skinner, in v. Riff-raff, (qv.) from the Dut. Raffen, to rive or reave, and Tooke immediately from the A. S. Ref-ian, reaf-ian, rapere, to rive, reave, or bereave, to tear away. Raff is,—

Any thing reaved or torn away, (roughly, raggedly, coarsely,) the rough or ragged or coarse parts, the rags; the refuse; a rough, unsorted heap or mass or medley.

To raff up, in Carew, is to put up or collect roughly, coarsely, in a disorderly manner.

A fansie fedde me ones, to wryte in verse and rime,
To wray my grieve, to craue reward, to couer still my crime:

To frame a long discourse, on sturring of a strawe,
To rumble rime in raffe and ruffe, yet all not worth an have.

Gascoigne. The Green Knight's Farewell to Fansie.

Now that Church-ales ought to be sorted in the better ranks of these twaine [things] may be gathered from their causes and effects, which I thus raffe up together.
Carew. Suruey of Cornwall, fol. 69.

The Synod of Trent [was called] to settle a raff of errors and superstitions.—Barrow. On the Unity of the Church.

RA'FFLE, v. To raffle is to rifle, which RA'FFLE, n. Skinner derives from A. S. Reaf-ian, rapere, to reave. (See RAFF.) Fr. Raffle, a game at three dice, wherein he that throws all three alike wins whatsoever is set; also a rifling. —“Faire un raffle, to rifle; to sweep all away before them. Raffler, to rifle; to sweep all away:” (Win all. See the quotation from Dryden.)

Now cometh hasardrie with his apertenautes, as tables and raffes, of which cometh deceit, false othes, chidings, and all raving, blaspheming, and reneying of God; hate of his neighbours, wast of goodes, mispending of time, and sometime manslaughter.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Wild. What is the ladies' game, Sir?
Lop. Most commonly they use raffe. That is, to throw in with three dice, till duplets and a chance be thrown; and the highest duplets wins, except you throw in and in, which is called raffe; and that wins all.
Dryden. The Mock Astrologer, Act iii.

— And swear, and curse,
And crucify his Saviour worse
Than those Jew troopers, that threw out,
When they were raffing for his coat.
Butler. Satire upon Gaming.

Instead of piddling for the little prizes which are to be found in what may be called the paltry raffe of colony faction, they might then hope, from the presumption which men naturally have in their own ability and good fortune, to draw some of the great prizes which sometimes come from the wheel of the great state lottery of British politics.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

RAFT. } Raft, Skinner thinks, is the Lat. RA'FTER. } Ratis. Rafter, A. S. Raft-er; Dut. Raft-er, lignum, rude. It is the past part. raf-ed, raft, or rest, of the A. S. Reaf-ian, to rive or reave, to tear away.

That which is raft, rest, torn, or roughly hewn or cut. A raft is formed or framed of pieces of wood or timber so rest. A rafter,—such or similar piece used in building.

And by assault he wan the citee after,
And rent adoun bothe wall, and sparre, and rafter.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 992.

But with our boat and a raft which we had made & towed at our boat's sterne, we were saued some 26 of vs.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 573.

Upon theis were fastned jeests of streyght timber, whych were couered over with rafters and hurdles.
Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 95.

If thou art she, tell me where is that sonne,
That floated with thee on that fatal raffe.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act v. sc. 1.

The rafters that lie over and reach from prop to prop, ought to be tied and fastened thereto with as streight and sure a knot as is possible.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

Good old Philemon seized it with a prong,
And from the sooty rafter drew it down.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

A mighty wave rush'd o'er him as he spoke;
The raft it covered, and the mast it broke.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

RAG, n. } Junius,—from the Gr. ῥακος, a RA'GGED. } torn garment. The A. S. Hrac- RA'GGEDNESS. } od, Lye says, is rak-ed, ragged, RA'GGY. } laceratus; and it may be racked, bracked, or broken, distracted, rent, or torn asunder. See RACK, v.; and, in v. BRACK, the quotation from Chapman.

That which is rent or torn; severed, tattered; a tatter.

Ragabash or raggabrash (see Grose and Brockett) is, perhaps, a corruption of ragged (or perhaps rakell) rubbish: but of ragamuffin (written in Shakespeare rag of muffin, and in Piers Plouhman ragamoffin,) the examples found have afforded no clue to trace the origin.

Rag, in the two passages from Shakespeare, is a very different word; the commentators call it an opprobrious term; it is merely rogue, (qv.) cheat, impostor; (one having a concealed, covered character. See ROGUE, and RAY.)

Rechelessness stod forth in ragged clothes.

Piers Plouhman, p. 193.

It is a slowe may nat forbear,
Ragges ribaned with gold to weare,
For also well woll loue be sette
Under ragges as rich rotchette.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

And not to wanderliche a dulled asse,
Ragged and torne, disguised in array.

Id. The Court of Loue.

Hir ragges thei anone of drawe,
And as it was that tyme lawe,
She had bathe, she had reste,
And was arraied to the beste.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

That was this dale a ragged tree,
To morowe vpon his maiestee
Stant in the temple well beseyne.

Id. Ib. b. v.

But the rest of the multitude of women and children (for thei came from home and passed the Rhine tag and rag) beganne to flie here and there euerye way.

Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 92.

And what manner of men were the Romans? In good faith no better but a sort of ragged shepherdes, y^t wrongfully held a piece of ground taken from the right owners by robbery.—Goldynge. Justine, fol. 117.

The rimes which pleased thee were all in print
And mine were ragged, hard for to be read.

Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

His decking, both for himself and horse, being cut out into the fashion of very rags; yet all so daintily joined together with precious stones, as it was a brave raggedness, and a rich poverty.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

To Alexander Cherilus was welcum at those tymes:
Who gaue him crownes (a princelie gift)
for raggie rugged rymes.

Drant. Horace. Ep. to Augustus.

If thou wilt curse; thy father (that poor ragge)
Must be thy subiect.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Ford. Ile prat her: Out of my doore, you witch! You ragge, you baggage, &c. out! out!

Id. The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

Amy. My voice is ragged; I know I cannot please you.

Id. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 5.

I have led my rag of muffins where they were pepper'd.

Id. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 3.

The grosse pickle sauce called alex, if it be made through hot, cureth the raggednesse of nails.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 10.

The dog and rag-market is hard by, where every Sunday morning there is a kind of public mart for those commodities.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 7.

Mean as I am, yet I may have the grace
To make you father of a generous race,
And noble then am I, when I begin,
In virtue clothed, to cast the rags of sin.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

Last, Winter creeps along with tardy pace,
Sour is his front, and furrowed is his face.
His scalp if not dishonour'd quite of hair,
The ragged fleece is thin, and thin is worse than bare.

Id. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

Shall we, quoth he, thus basely brook
The vile affront that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, with vapouring and huffing,
Have put upon us.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

She saide, that she bathe wolde.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Then fume we and rage and set vp the bristels and bend ourselves to take vengeance.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 120.

But this courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane:
so that again with rageful eyes she bad him defend himself, for no less than his life should answer it.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

But when indeed she found his ghost was gone, then sorrow lost the wit of utterance, and grew rageful.

Id. Ib. b. iii.

But oft the winter storms of raging seas,
And oft the boisterous winds did them to stay.

Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

Thou rulest the raging of the sea: when the waues thereof arise, thou stillest them.—Bible, 1583. Psalm lxxxix. 9.

But our battayl is with wicked spirites, the enemyes and foes of Christe, whose champions and instrumentes those are that ragingly assault vs.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 6.

Our Sauyours whiche redeemed vs with so great a price may not thincke that it longeth to hym to se vs peryshe, neyther to suffer the shippe of his church to bee so shaken with many great and ragious flodes.

Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. ii.

What a ragiousnes is it, to set thy chastity common like an harlot, that thou maiest gather riches.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. iii. c. 7.

And streight they saw the raging surges rear'd
Up to the skyes, that them of drowning made affear'd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

— Words, well dispost,
Have secret powre t' appease inflamed rage
If not, leave unto me thy knight's last patronage.

Id. Ib. c. 8.

— As ye in company

Or plucked off been in a ragery.

Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

The wretch had hardly made his dungeon fast;
The fierce avenger came with bounding haste:
Survey'd the mouth of the forbidden hold;
And here and there his raging eyes he roll'd.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. viii.

For sparkling fire, from hinds' unwearied hands,
Is often scatter'd o'er their unctuous rinds,
And after spread abroad by raging winds.

Id. Georgics, b. ii.

Again convoked before the Indian throne,
The monarch meets him with a rageful frown.

Mickle. Lusiad, b. viii.

Anger, in the excess of its violence, when it is excited to a degree of phrenzy, so that the mind has totally lost self-command, when it prompts to threats and actions extravagant and atrocious, is termed rage.

Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. § 3.

RAIL, n. } The A. S. Ræg-el is the dim.
RAIL, v. } of ræg or ray, the past tense
RAI'LING, n. } of wigan, to rig or cover; whence (see Tooke) rails, by which any area, courtyard, or other place is thinly (i.e. not closely, but with small intervals) covered. And also a woman's rail, or night-rail; a covering, (sc.) a vest, to cover or throw over her.

This yerde was large, and railed at the alies,
And shadowed wel with blosomy bowes grene.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres b. ii.

And sodenlie his lothly forme
In to an egle he gan transforme,
And flewe, and set him on a rayle,
Wherof the kynge had great meruaille.

Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

This gardeyn was towred at euery corner, and rayled wt rayles gilt, al ye bakkes were set with floures artificial of silke & golde, ye leues cut of grene sattyn, so y^t they semed very floures.—Hall. Henry VIII. an. 8.

The other king of frame with railes and spars over-thwart, beareth a vine more free for plentie of wine than the rest, and called this is compluviana vitis, because it resemblith the hollow course of gutter tiles, that in houses receive all raine water and cast it off.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 21.

As nightingales
And things in cambrick railes.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act v. sc. 1.

My lord of Leicester, favourite to queen Elizabeth, was making a large chace about Cornbury park, meaning to inclose it with post and railes; and one day, casting up his charge what it would come to, Mr. Goldingham, a free spoken man, stood by, and said to my lord, "Methinks your lordship goeth not the cheapest way to work." "Why, Goldingham?" said my lord. "Marry, my lord," said Gold-ingham, "count you but upon the posts, for the country will find you railing."—Bacon, Apophthegm 28.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or a night-rail, a petticoat or a manteau; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vitta and peplus, the stola and instila.—Addison. Ancient Medals.

Extend a rail of elm, securely arm'd
With spiculated pailing.—Mason. English Garden, b. ii.

RAIL, v.

RAI'LER.

RAI'LINGS, n.

RA'LLY, v.

RAI'LLERY.

Rally and raillery: Fr. Railler, raillerie; Dut. Rallen, rellen, from ridiculiari or ridere. (See RA'LLY, v. in Menage and Skinner.) Tooke thinks from ræg-el, the dim. of ræg, or ray, the past tense of wig-an, to cover; (see RAIL, supra;) and this etymology coincides with the usage, viz. Fr. Raillerie, raillery, (a word, says Skinner, lately introduced.)

Slightly covered, or cloaked, or concealed, (sc.)
jesting, or bantering, or satire. And the verb,
Fr. Railler,—

To rally, to joke or jest at or with, to banter, to satirize gently or slightly. And—

To rail, (by usage,)—to satirize roughly or coarsely; to abuse, or employ abusive, angry, contumelious, or opprobrious language, of or toward —any one.

And in that Peter sayd that they shall rayle and blaspheme the truth, it foloweth that there shalbe a little stock reserued by the had of God to testifie the truth vnto them, or els how could they rayle on it? And it foloweth that those raylers shalbe the mightier part in the world, or els they durst not do it.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 289.

Who haue applied themselves to ridde their countrey from dishonour, to auouch the trueth, and to shake off the yoke of railers and reuilers.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 553.

Where the matter of difference is mere conscience in a quiet minde inwardlie, and not contentious malice with spitefull rayling openlie, I can be content to follow this reule, "in misliking some one thing," not "to hate for anie thing els."—Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

But Michael tharchangel, when he had disputaciō with the deuill concerning the body of Moses, was yet afrayed opely to speak raylingly to the deuill though he were the moste filthy feende.—Udal. Jude.

— Yet n'ould she stent

Her bitter rayling and foule reuilement.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

You may believe me, for I speak it without raillery, his extravagancy came at last into such a madness, that he would not put on a pair of shoes, each of which was not big enough for both his feet.—Cowley. Ess. Of Greatness.

— You think now I jest;

But, without raillery, she is so lovely,
That, were not Violante very assur'd
Of her own beauty, and the strong ideas
That still upholds within you, one might question
Her wit, to haue set her in her gallant's way.

Digby. Elvira, Act i.

At mighty villains, who the state oppress,
They durst not rail, perhaps; they lash'd, at least,
And turned them out of office with a jest.

Dryden. Ep. To Henry Higden, Esq.

Partake, my guest, he cried, without control,
The social feast, and drain the cheering bowl:
Dread not the railer's laugh, nor ruffian's rage;
No vulgar roof protects thy honour'd age.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

Raillery is the finest part of our conversation; but as it is our usual custom to counterfeit and adulterate whatever is too dear to us, so we have done with this, and turned it all into what is generally called repartee or being smart.

Suiff. Hints towards an Essay on Conversation.

This is the true art of raillery, when a man turns another into ridicule, and shows at the same time he is in good humour, and not urged by malice against the person he rallies.—Tatler, No. 59.

L. Wish. O he's a rallier, nephew—My cousin's a wit, and your great wits always rally their best friends to chuse. When you have been abroad, nephew, you will understand rallier better.—Congreve. Way of the World, Act iii. sc. 1.

Let it not be said that they are men of depraved understanding and depraved morals. This is to rail, not to argue.—Bolingbroke. Fragment of Essays, § 61.

The worst that has befallen me in the defence of religion is only the railings of the vile and impotent.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 4.

RAILE, v. To run; I know not (says Skinner) whether from the Fr. Rouler, to roll. Lye,—to rill, which he derives from the Dut. Rivole, rivulus,—

To spring, gush forth, flow.

They had by that battell receyued a great good turne, for that Corbey, the author of the warre and raiser of the multitude, was slaine.—Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 254.

Great ladie of the greatest isle, whose light
Like Phœbus' lampe throughout the world doth shine,
Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
And raise my thoughtes, too humble and too vile.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Throw [these] about you, as the Sunne, his raies,
In quick'ning with their powre, the dying race
Of friendlesse vertue, since they thus can raise
Their honor'd raisers to eternitie.

Chapman. To the Duke of Lennox.

They may be said to have been the chief raisers of those Picaroons to be pirates, who are now come to that height of strength, that they daily endamage and affront all Christendom.—Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 11.

There are certain advantages also that enthusiasts have, which are to be taken notice of, whereby they have imposed upon many; as, that they have spoken very raisedly and divinely, which most certainly has happened to sundry persons a little before they have grown stark mad.

More. Of Enthusiasm, s. 55.

As pale and wan as ashes was his looke:
His body leane and meagre as a rake.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

He said, and rose: as holy zeal inspires,
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. vii.

— The land with daily care
Is exercised, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows the proud foes expelled,
And birds with clamours frightened from the field.

Eftsoones she thus resolv'd.—
Before they could new counsels re-allie,
To rest upon them in that extasie,
And take what fortune, time, and place would lend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 6.

Yet soon he rallies and revives the warre;
Hubert pursues the rear of Hurgonil;
And Borgio's rear with chase so loos'ned are,
That them the count does with close order kill.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 5.

And that which was erewhile the duke's firm van,
Before old Vasco's front vouchsafe to fly,
Till with their subtle rallies they began
In small divisions hidden strength to try. Id. Ib.

If God should carry this perverse man out of the limits of this world, and show him a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanc'd just then to rally to-

RA'MMISH. } There seems little reason to doubt that the A. S. Hremman, which Lye, Somner, and Benson interpret impedire,—to impede, to stop,— is the true origin of the verb to ram, and that the animal is so called from its action with the head.
See the second quotation from Cæsar. To ram is,—

To stop, to stop or block up; to cram, to press close, to drive, push, beat, or otherwise force down; to beat or batter.

Rammish,—having the qualities or disposition of a ram, its salaciousness, strong smell, &c.

There was a ram, that men might see,
That had a fleese of gold, that shone so bright,
That no where was there such another sight.
Chaucer. The Legend of Hipsiphile.

For all the world they stinken as a gote;
Hir savour is so rammish and so hote,
That though a man a mile from hem be,
The savour wol enfect him, trusteth me.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,409.

Great postes of streight timber set on a row equally dystant a two fote space one from another, are let into the grounde and fastened agayne on the inside, and rammed

Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 5.

Their airy ramblings are with ease confined:—
Clip their king's wings, and if they stay behind
No bold usurper dares invade their right,
Nor sound a march, nor give the sign for flight.
Addison. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Men of sound parts, who, deeply read,
O'erload the storehouse of the head,
With furniture they ne'er can use,
Cannot forgive our rambling muse
This wild excursion. Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

Kircher, bewildered as he was, had yet some ground for may it not be from the A. S. Rym-an, to spread, to extend, to reach out, to branch? See ROAM, RAMBLE.

To branch out, to extend, to expand separately;
as the branches from the trunk.

Whether all coral were first of a woody substance and afterward converted; or rather some thereof were never such, but from the sprouting spirit of salts were able in their stony natures to ramify and send forth branches: is not without some question.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 4.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, creep. Rempende is given by Lye and Junius from Ælfred's Translation of Gregory, De Curâ Pastorali; where the Lat. Præcipitata is rendered by the A. S. Rempende.

To climb, to mount, to ascend; to rise or spring up, to leap or jump up or about, to rise, spring, or grow up, (rapidly, wantonly, superabundantly.) Rampallian may be a ramping or romping wanton person.

And if that any neighebour of mine
Wol not in chircche to my wif encline,
Or be so-hardy to hire to trespace,
Whan she cometh home she rampeth in my face,
And cryeth; "False coward, wreke thy wif."
Chaucer. The Monkes Prologue, v. 13,915.

Hall. Hen. VI. an. 6.

Unlesse she chaunst their stubborne mouths to twitch;
Then, forming tarre, their bridles they wold chomp,
And trampling the fine element wold fiercely ramp.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Though, indeed, all cruelty be subject to the revenge of the gods, yet is this an act of a vile and base mind, to honour a man while he lived, and to make him free of their city; and now that another had slain him, they to be in such an exceeding jollity withall, and to exceed the bounds of modesty so far, as to ramp in manner with both their feet upon the dead, and to sing songs of victory, as if they themselves had been the men that had valiantly slain him.
North. Plutarch, p. 707.

Surely the prelates would have Saint Paul's words ramp

RA'MPART, n. } Fr. Rempart, remparer.
RA'MPER, or } Menage derives from riparo, RA'MPIRE, v. } defence, and riparo from RA'MPIRE, n. } ripa. It is more probably of the same origin as ramp, signifying to rise or raise, rampart being—

Something raised or thrown up, (sc.) in defence, for protection; a bank, wall, fortress.

And so [he] retired into the abbeie from whence he came, shutting and rampering vp the gates, and caused the same to be stronglie warded with soldiers.—Fox. Mart. an. 1264.

And having rampired the stode for defence of the soul-diers that were behynde, they proes in their galleis and dyd shoote and caste darts against their enemies without anye perill or daunger to themselves.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 59.

Good Will, the maister of the shot,
Stode in the rampire braue and proude,
For spence of pouder he spared not,
Assault, assault, to crye aloude.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Assault of Cupid.

But traynes of treason (oh, the more the ruth)
Could vndermine the bulwarkes of this forte,
And raze his ramparts downe in sundrie sorte?
Gaseigne. The Fruits of Warre.

I have seen my selfe in the campe, from the souldiours, sentinels in the nightwatch, the resemblance of lightening to stickes fast upon the speares and pikes set before the rampiar.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 37.

—These seven bold lords, an hundred souldiers led
In every seuer'd company; and every man his pike:
Some placed on the rampires top, and some amidst the dike:
All fires made, and their suppers tooke.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

In vain to honour they pretend,
Who guard themselves with ramparts and with walls;
Them only Fame the truly valiant calls,
Who can an open breach defend.—Cowley. Maidenhead.

There are no fences so strong, nor any ramparts so high, but daring and desultory wits may either break through them or leap over them.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 141.

These turned by Phœbus from their wonted ways,
Deluged the rampire nine continual days;
The weight of waters saps the yielding wall,
And to the sea the floating bulwarks fall.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

Round the rough castle shrilly sung
The whirling blast, and wildly flung
On each tall rampart's thundering side,
The surges of the tumbling tide.

Warton. Ode. The Grave of King Arthur.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

The best of men have ever lov'd repose:
They hate to mingle in the filthy fray;
Where the soul sours, and gradual rancour grows
Embitter'd more from peevish day to day.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

Thence to the hostile camp his eye he turns,
Where for their peace and sleep secure he mourns
With rancorous despite and envious anguish.

Rowe. Pharsalia, b. vi.

The oils, with which fishes abound, often turn rancid, and lie heavy on the stomach, and affect the very sweat with a rancid smell, which is found to be true in some places, where the inhabitants live entirely upon fish.

Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 4.

Rancour is that degree of malice which preys upon the possessor. His heart is torn with vexation when he contemplates the happiness of another, or when he is foiled in his evil purposes towards him.

whence—aller à grand randon, to run like a rapid torrent, in a headlong or precipitate course.
Hickes gives from an Anglo-Norman MS.—“Ac furre fleeth into randun.” It is applied to—

The motion of any thing running, flowing, or falling without a fixed, determined, or confined course or channel; motion or action, at hap or hazard; without guidance or direction, choice or selection.

You flee with winges of often change at random where you please;
But that in time will breede in you some fowle and fell disease.

Turberville. The Louer to a Gentlewoman, &c.

For coragiously the two kynges newly fought with great random and force.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

The gentle lady, loose at random left,
The greene-wood long did walke, and wander wide
At wilde adventure, like a forlorne wette.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

My thoughts and my discourse, as mad men's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd.

Shakespeare. Son. 147.

Nay, not so much as the event of casting a lot (which seems the most fortuitous contingent thing in the whole world) is left at random: for even in that case, the disposal of the lot (as Solomon tells us) is from the Lord.

Sharp. vol. i. Ser. 13.

So when the watchful shepherd from the blind,
Wounds with a random shaft the careless hind,
Distracted with her pain, she flies the woods,
Bounds o'er the lawn, and seeks the silent floods.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

Churchill, himself unconscious of his powers,
In penury consum'd his idle hours;
And, like a scattered seed at random sown,
Was left to spring by vigour of his own.

Cowper. Table Talk.

RANGE, v. } Perhaps (says Skinner) from RANGE, n. } Dut. Rannen, to run, or ranghen, RA'NGER. } to agitate or shake, to move:

They made a decree, and tooke order that no corne mais-ters that bought and sold grain should beat this mule away from their raunging sives.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 44.

The shepherds there abroad may safely lie,
On hills and downes, withouten dread or daunger;
No ravenous wolves the good man's hope destroy,
Nor outlawes fell affray the forest raunger.

Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

A milk-white hind, immortal and unchang'd,
Fed on the lawns, and in the forest ranged,
Without unspotted, innocent within,
She feared no danger, for she knew no sin.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Nor to this evanescent speck of earth
Poorly confined, the radiant tracts on high
Are her [philosophy] exalted range; intent to gaze Creation through.

Thomson. Autumn.

—Yet up the hill,
Mine eye descries a distant range of caves,
Delv'd in the ridges of the craggy steep;
And this way still another.—Mason. Caractacus, Act i. sc. 1.

Thus fare the shiv'ring natives of the North,
And thus the rangers of the Western world
Where it advances far into the deep,
Toward the Antarctic.

Cowper. Task, b. i.

RANGE, v. } Fr. Ranger, arranger, (from RANGE, n. } the A. S. Ring, hring, a ring or RA'NGEMENT. } circle,) to order and dispose persons and things, as is usually done at public assemblies, where those who meet generally form themselves into a ring or circle. See RANK.

To put or place in order, to dispose in an orderly manner; to methodize, to order rightly;

Of the rainged empire fall: Heere is my space.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 1.

Therein an hundred raunges weren pight,
And hundred founaces all burning bright;
By every founace many feends did byde,
Deformed creatures, horrible in sighte.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

It was a vault ybuilt for great dispence,
With many raunges reard along the wall,
And one great chimney.

Id. Ib. c. 9.

We say the body of the moon for the moon, or the matter of the world for the world; which kind of language has its reasons and foundation in our way of forming and -ranging our ideas for our more distinct perception.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 389.

They are, most probably, nothing else but general abstract ideas, common measures and receptacles formed by the mind, for the better lodgement, rangement, and adjustment of our other ideas.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 468.

RANK, v. } Order, method; disposition in RANK, n. } order or method; place in order, station, or degree; place or station, (sc.) in line or row.

To be in, to put or place in, rank, order, or method; to range, (qv.)

Fine Erato, whose looke a lively chere
Presents, in dancing, keeps a comely grace,
With semely gesture doth Polymnie stee,
Whose wordes whole routes of rankes do rule in place.

Vncertaine Auctors. Of the Nine Muses.

But as he went about to charge it the third time, Olocara, which had not learned to keepe his ranke, or rather moued with rage, leapt on the platforme, and thrust him through the bodie with his pike and slew him.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 358.

Infinite shapes of creatures there are bred,
And uncouth formes, which none yet ever knew:
And every sort is in a sondry bed

Sett by itselfe, and rankt in comely rew;
Some fitt for reasonable sowles t' indew;
Some made for beasts, some made for birds to weare;
And all the fruitfull spawn of fishes hew
In endlesse rankes along enraunged were,
That seem'd the ocean could not containe them there.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

—He chooses
With care t'avoid the cause that may produce
Some strange effect, which will not well keep rank
With the rare temperance, which is admired
In his life hitherto.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act iii. sc. 3.

Meanwhile the pomp of festivals increased,
By heralds rank'd, in marshall'd order move,
The city tribes, to pleas'd Apollo's grove.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

—With inward view,
Thence on th' ideal kingdom swift she turns
Her eye; and instant, at her powerful glance,
Th' obedient phantoms vanish or appear:
Compound, divide, and into order shift,
Each to his rank, from plain perception
To the fair forms of fancy's fleeting train.

Thomson. Autumn.

Such a rancke and full writer must use, if he will do wisely, the exercise of a verie good kinde of epitome.

Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

Be not they slowe belyes whiche had leauer by false doctryne lyue in ydlenes and rankly, then for the defence of the gospel to suffer hungr and be many tymes shrewdely handled as I am.—Udal. Titus, c. 1.

Nor that is not onely good for their maners and ranknes of the bodie, and wantonnes to keepe them vnder, but also shal keepe better their health.

Vives. The Instruction of Christian Women, b. i. c. 8.

Ah for pittie! will rancke winter's rage
 These bitter blastes never gin t' assuage.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. February.

The seely man, seeing him ryde so rank
 And ayme at him, fell flat to ground for feare,
 And crying, "Mercy," loud, his pitious handes gan reare.

Id. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

And fast beside a little brooke did pas
 Of muddie water, that like puddle stanke,
 By which few crooked sallowes grew in ranke.

Id. Ib., b. iv. c. 5.

Say, who is he showes so great worthinesse,
 That rides so ranke, and bends his lance so fell?

Faurefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. iii. s. 18.

I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
 Who else must be let blood, who else is ranke:
 If I my selfe, there is no houre so fit
 As Cæsar's death's houre.

Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act iii. sc. 1.

And like a bated and retired flood,
 Leaving our ranknesse and irregular course.

Id. K. John, Act v. sc. 4.

But he is worst, who (beggardly) doth chaw
 Others' wit's fruits, and in his ravenous maw
Rankly digested, doth those things out spew,
 As his own things.

Donne, Sat. 2.

Whence those ill humours ripen'd to a head,
 Bred by the rankness of the plenteous land.

Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

The relator, and others, were fain, instead of butter made of cow's milk, (which could not be had where they took in their lading,) to make use of that made of goats, or ewe's milk, which is not (as the Indians make it) so good, and to whose rankness he ascribed that which he had observed in some of the meat buried in it.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 109.

—To Athens speed thy flight;
 On 'curst Aglauros try thy utmost art,
 And fix thy rankest venoms in her heart.

Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

As [Swift] used to call upon Pope to admire Rabelais more than the bard of Twickenham was disposed to do, it may be urged with probability, that Swift rather led the way than received lessons in the coarseness so rankly practised by the witty Frenchman.—Scott. Memoirs of Swift, § 6.

—In vice

There is a noisome rankness unperceived
 By gross corporeal sense, which so offends
 Heav'n's pure divinities, as us the stench
 Of vapour wafted from sulphureous pool,
 Of poisonous weed obscene.

Mason. Caractacus, Act i. sc. 1.

RA'NKLE, v. A dim. of rank; foul.
 To be or become foul or corrupt; virulent, sore;
 painfully diseased or distempered; to fester.

—What plague doth wery thus mye minde,
 Within my bones to rankle is assinde,
 What poyson pleasant swete!—Wyatt. To his Vnkinde Loue.

For that which sendeth salue,
 and comfort to the reast,
 Doth cause my rankling sore to rage and dubble in my breast.

Turberville. That Time conquereth all Things.

Most did she thinke, but most she thought amiss,
 That that same former fatall wound of his Whyleare by Tryphon was not thoroughly healed,
 But closely rankled under th' orifis.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

RA'NSACK, v. Fr. Saccager; It. Saccheg-giare; Sp. Saquear; to sack, ransack, pillage, rifle, ruin, destroy, (Cotgrave.) The Sueo-Gothic Ran sacka, rem furtivam in alienâ domo quærere, to seek plunder in the house of another, is (by common consent, says Ihre) from ran, rapina, (in A. S. Ran, from rend-an, diripere,) and soeka, quærere, (in A. S. Sec-an, to seek;) and to ransack
 is—

To seek or search for plunder, booty, pillage;
 to search carefully, earnestly, eagerly; to plunder,
 to pillage, to take by violence.

Whan Phebus with his fire torches rede,
Ransacked hath euery louter in his drede.

Chaucer. Complaint of Mars & Venus.

He can the pakkes well ransake,
 So priuely beareth none aboute
 His golde, that he ne fint it oute.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The trueth of which saying, lacketh no kinde of examples

 To yield himselfe unto the mightie ill,
 Which, as a victour proud, gan ransack fast
 His inward partes.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Meantime his lordship lolls within at ease,
 Pampering his paunch with foreigne rarities,
 Both sea and land are ransacked for the feast.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 2.

Thus utmost lands are ransacked to afford
 The far-fetched dainties and the costly board.

Roue. Pharsalia, b. ix.

If by this be meant ransacking into all the public and private passages of his life, and wresting every one into a crime, far be it from me to approve in his case, what I abhor this libeller for doing in the case of another.

Bolingbroke. Final Answer to the Craftsman.

 redemption, (Wachter.) The Ger. Süne; Flem.
Soen; Sw. Sona; Goth. Saun; are used for the act of reconciliation, or for that which is given to appease the anger of another, (Ihre.) Notwithstanding all this, the word ransom seems more probably to be corrupted from redemptio; Gr.

I wold no lenger in the bed abide,
 If that I felt his arme over my side,
 Til he had made his raunson unto me.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5993.

And if we thynken, how it stood
 Of thilke raunson, whiche he paide,
 As saynt Gregorie it wrote and saide,
 All was behouely to the man.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Darius being eskaped to Babilon, sent his letters to Alexander, desiring him of liberty to ransome the women that were his prisoners, and for their ransom he profered

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 24.

For him they take, his ransom must redeem,
 Only French crowns the Englishmen esteem.

Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

Since 'tis for me to lose my life more fit,
 Than 'tis for her to save and ransom it.—Cowley. Silence.

He to his city sent as prisoners of the war,
 Hopeless of ransom, and condemned to lie
 In durance, doom'd a lingering death to die.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Talk not of life or ransom (he replies)
 Patroclus dead, whoever meets me dies,
 In vain a single Trojan sues for grace.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. 21.

Lisping our syllables we scramble next
 Through moral narrative, or sacred text,
 And learn with wonder how this world began,
 Who made, who marr'd, and who has ransom'd man.

Rantipole,—a tearing, wild, noisy person.

To-day, you should see him ranting so wildly, that nobody durst come near him; to-morrow, flinging of cushions, and playing at snowballs, with his servants.

Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

Hellish heresies, and atheous paradoxes: one allows of plurality or community of wives; another allows a man to divorce that wife he hath upon slight occasions, and to take another; one is a ranter, another is a seeker, a third is a shaker.—Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 161.

And these are the debauched, ranting, and hectoring atheists.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 176.

This person [F. Cheynell] who had ran through most, if not all, religions, even to rantism, died soon after, and thereby saved the hangman his labour.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

All their discourse about a happy life here were vain, and contradicted by themselves, when after all their rants about their wise man being happy in the bull of Phalaris, &c. they yet allowed him to dispatch himself if he saw cause.

Stillington. vol. 1. Ser. 5.

The eldest was a termigant, imperious, prodigal, lewd, profligate wench, as ever breathed, she used to rantipole

RAPTUROUS.
Fr. Ravir, rapacité, rapine, rapt; It. Rapire, rapace, rapacità, rapina; Sp. Rapar, rapaz, rapacidad, rapina; immediately from the Lat. Rap-ere, which is itself (Tooke) from the A.S. Reaf-ian, to rive, reave, or bereave, to tear away. Vossius derives from the Gr. ῥάπτειν, and that from the Heb. (See REAVE, RAPID, RAVISH, &c.) To rap or rape is—
To reave or tear away, to force, hurry, bear, or carry, or take away; to force, to violate; to rob, to plunder.

Rapt,—borne, carried away, transported; and, hence, (met.) rapt, rapture; transport, trance, ecstasy, violent motion or emotion, of the mind, senses, passions.

Rape, of land,—perhaps, a portion raped or reaved, separated from. Somner thinks,—from A.S. Rape, a rope; as if rapes were portions of land measured and divided by ropes.

To rap out,—to utter rapidly, hastily, violently.

Edward mot he haue, if he wild him rape,
The toun he suld so saue, that he suld not ascape.

— But his so swift and deathlesse horse, that fetcht Their gift to Peleus from the gods, soon rapt him from his reach. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

That with the sweetnesse of her rare delight
The prince half rapt began on her to dote.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

And therefore in this Encyclopedie and round of knowledge, like the great and exemplary wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles: that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural proper course, in the slow and sober wheel of the other.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, Pref.

A virgin while she liv'd, chaste Winifred: who chose
Before her maiden-gem she forcibly would lose,
To have her harmless life by the lewd raptor spilt.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

With such brave raptures from her words that rise,
She made a breach in his impressive breast,
And all his pow'rs so fully did surprise,
As seem'd to rock his senses to their rest.
Id. Barons' Wars, b. iii.

Neat Marlow bathed in the Thespian springs
Had in him those brave translunary things,
That the first Poets had, his raptures were All air and fire. Id. To Henry Reynolds, Esq.

— Your prattling nurse

While she chats him.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. i.

Such swarms of prophets and rapturists have flown out of these hives in some ages.
Spenser. On Vulgar Prophecies, (1665,) p. 43.

Plotinus aimed at a kind of rapturous and ecstatic union with the To év, and T' αγαθόν, the first of the three highest Gods, (called The One and The Good.)
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 594.

To hide their faults, they rap out oaths and tear,
Now, though we lie, we're too well bred to swear.
Dryden. Prologues & Epilogues, Prol. 31.

Bravely sworn!—though this is no flower of the sun, yet
I am sure it is something that deserves to be called a rapper.
Parker. Rep. of Rehers. Transp. p. 200.

Their husbands robb'd, and made hard shifts,
T' administer unto their gifts,
All they could rap, and rend, and pilfer,
To scraps and ends of gold and silver.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

We may assure ourselves that they never were rapped into any heaven but that of their own imagination, nor rose to any divine union but that with the divine Plato.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 4. Authority in Matters of Religion.

What trench can intercept, what fort withstand,
The brutal soldier's rude rapacious hand,
When eager to his crime's reward he flies,
And bathed in blood demands the horrid prize.
Rowe. Pharsalia, b. vii.

What will the clamour be, and how will the same authority foment it, when you proceed to lash in other instances our want of elegance even in luxury, and our wild profusion, the source of insatiable rapacity, and almost universal venality?—Bolingbroke. Letter to Pope, Introd.

Raptur'd I stood; and, as this hour amaz'd,
With reverence at the lofty wonder gaz'd:
Raptur'd I stand; for earth ne'er knew to bear
A plant so stately, or a nymph so fair.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

— The latent Damon drew
Such maddening draughts of beauty to his soul,
As for a while o'erwhelm'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson. Summer.

One day they [the kings who succeeded William the Conqueror] plundered, and the next day they founded monasteries, as their rapaciousness or scruples chanced to predominate.—Burke. Abridg. of English History, b. iii. c. 6.

— Yes, my friends,
For nine years against the sons of rapine
I led my veterans, oft to victory,
Never till then to shame.
Mason. Caractacus, Act i. sc. 1.

Hear from the grave, great Taliessin hear!
They breathe a soul to animate thy clay,
Bright rapture calls, and soaring as she sings,
Waves in the eye of heaven her many colour'd wings.
Gray. The Bard.

Decrepit spheres grown dark and cold.
Carew. Cælum Britannicum, s. 4.

We mortals could have little better ground for our faith and hope, in such an omnipotent arbitrary will as this, then we could have in the motions of senseless atoms, furiously agitated, or of a rapid whirlwind.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 873.

Turn we a moment fancy's rapid flight

But so prodigiously fast, &c.
Butler. The Elephant in the Moon.

Thales is said to have held, that mind, and therefore the efficient cause which had made all things out of water, was the swiftest of things, and pervaded rapidly the universe.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. Human Reason.

Amidst these errors in government, neither of these princes attended to that large accession of property and power which was silently, but rapidly, devolving on the people.—Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 19.

RAPIER. Fr. Dut. and Ger. Rapier. Wachter calls it ensis præacutus, and derives it from schrapp- pen, to scrape. Lacombe and Roquefort call it a long sword. Skinner suggests,—a rapiendo vitam; perhaps from the rapid motions or actions to which it is suited.

The other sort is greater than the first aforesaid, with a long bone made sharpe on both sides not much unlike a Cowley. Constantia & Philetus.

RAPPAREE'. Lye, in Junius,—Raperies, la-trones Hibernici, Irish robbers; A.S. Reperas; and refers to the verb to rove. The A.S. Repera, or Repere, is reafere, a reaver or robber.

See To REAVE, and To RAPE, and the quotation from Burnet.

A robber, (Scotch, Rever, reaver, reuffar.)

In the mean while, the Irish formed themselves into many bodies, which, by a new name, were called rapparees;
these knowing all the ways, and the bogs, and other places of retreat in Ireland, and being favoured by the Irish, that had submitted to the king, robbed and burnt houses in many places of the country.
Burnet. Own Time, b. v. an. 1690.

The law of the Jews exacted from them all the duties necessary to preserve peace and good order among themselves, and, if this be a mark of divinity, the laws which rapparees and banditti establish in their societies have the same.—Bolingbroke. A Letter on Abp. Tillotson's Sermon.

RA'PPORT. Fr. Rapport; a resemblance, correspondence, accord, or agreement between several things, (Cotgrave.)

It is obvious enough what rapport there is, and must ever be, between the thoughts and words, the conceptions and languages of every country, and how great a difference this must make in the comparison and excellence of books; and how easy and just a preference it must decree to those of the Greek and Latin, before any of the modern languages.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 786.

We must briefly premise, that a body is commonly said to be rarefied or dilated (for I take the word in a larger sense than I know many others do, for a reason that will quickly appear) when it acquires greater dimensions than the same body had before.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 144.

I have been informed as well by you as by other means, that the rarefaction of the air is at present the subject that busies the disquisitions of several eminent virtuosi, both domestick and foreign.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 500.

The paucity [of oil] seemed strange, and made it appear

R. Brunne, p. 117.

Lo here the fine and guerdon for travaille,
Of Jove, Apollo, of Mars, and such raskalle.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

For it was not straungers, nor a sort of raskals gathered here and there together, that fouled that city, but they were bred in the same soyle where they inhabite, and the place

Turberville. The Louer exhorteth his Lady, &c.

With the tooth of a small beast like a rat, they race some their faces, some their bodies, after diuers formes, as if it were with the scratch of a pin, the print of which rasure can neuer be done away againe during life.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 674.

For by those thre [partes of penaunce] lyke as by so many instrumentes, we make a perfyrt rasynge and clensynge of the soule from synnes. When we be about to rase and do

Young. Complaint, Night 5.

In short, 'twas his fate, unemploy'd, or in place, Sir,
To eat mutton cold, and cut blocks with a razor.

Goldsmith. Retaliation.

RASH, v. } Dr. Nott (who produces the ex-RA'SHER. } ample from the History of Arthur) says that the printed copy of Surrey reads rashed, (avulsus in Virgil;) "an old word (he adds) evidently formed from the Fr. Arracher;" i.e. to root up, to draw, tear, or pull up. G. Douglas renders Impavidus frangit telum, "unabasilie raschand the schaft in sounder." Raschis (fra-gores) the Glossary calls a word formed from the sound. It is more probably the A. S. Hrysan, hrisan, (see To CRUSH,) ruere, corruere, collidere, to rush together or against, to dash or beat together.

To dash, to beat, to bruise, to beat to pieces, to break.

To rash up hastily (in Fox) may be,—to dash, beat, knock up hastily; or, to hurry, to despatch hastily; more immediately from rash, the adj.
infra.

Julus, eke, ravish'd [rash'd] out of his arms.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

When Arthur saw the earl at that mischief he spurred his horse thitherward; and the first that he encountered he drove down flat to the earth, and the second he took in his arms, and rashed him out of the saddle.

Defy a hoghead.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 2.

In such a time it was as this, that not all the wisdom and power of the Roman senate, nor the wit and eloquence of Cicero, nor the courage and virtue of Brutus, was able to defend their country, or themselves, against the unexperienced rashness of a beardless boy, and the loose rage of a voluptuous madman.

Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

At length the lucky chief who oft had found
What vast success his rasher darings crown'd,
Who saw how much the favouring gods had done,

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

It is better to rest satisfied with an imperfect knowledge of him, by being content with general ideas, than to run the hazard of thinking unworthily of that great Being, by our rashness in proceeding to determinate ideas.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 347.

His beginnings must be in rashness; a noble fault: but

And God was in Crist recounceilinge to him the world, not rettyng [reputans] to hem her gyltis, and puttide in us the word of recounceilyng.—Wiclif. 2 Corynth. c. 5.

Ye have an annual stipend and an ordinarie fee from Cæsar; and it is rated out vnto you by a playn rule howe much or litel ye ought to require of the people for any duetie.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Because they came long before into the vyneyarde, they thought that after y^t rate of the time, they should receyue greater wages for ye daies worke.—Id. Matthew, c. 20.

As many as shal haue doen their feithful trauail, shalbe crowned with glorie and honour in the kingdome of heauē according to the quantitee or rate of ye fruct, which thei haue brought and encreased in the Lordes vineyard.
Id. Luke, c. 19.

And they shall not adventure hereafter any greater summe, then ratably according to their proportion of this their first aduenture.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 188.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason she obtains by this:
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fix'd, she understanding is.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 25.

He chaunst to come where those two ladies late,
Omylia and Amoret, abode,
Both in full sad and sorrowfull estate;
The one right feeble through the evill rate
Of food, which in her duresse she had found.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

Thus sate they all around in seemely rate;
And in the midst of them a goodly mayd
(Even in the lap of womanhood) there sate.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 11.

Orae were ratable to two markes of siluer.

Camden. Remaines. Money.

They part their pris'ners, passing them for debt,
And in their ransom ratably accord;
To a prince of ours, a page of theirs they set,
And a French lacquey to an English lord.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

The wise rater of things, as they weigh in the sanctuary's balance, and reason's, will obey the powers over them.

Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 11.

Nor will the purity which is inseparable from it, ever let us know what the vast and sinking expenses of lewdness and uncleanness are. In a word, it is vice only that is the chargeable thing, it is only shame and repentance that men buy at such costly rates.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

The wretch who slights the bounties of the skies,
And sinks, while favour'd with the means to rise,
Shall find them rated to their full amount,
The good he scorned all carried to account.
Cowper. Truth.

A ratable payment of all the debts of the deceased in equal degree, is clearly the most equitable method.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 19.

RATE, v. } A. S. Hreth-ian, sævire, to scold.
RA'TING, n. } See WRATH.
To speak wrathfully to; to scold, to chide.

— But yet by Seint Thomas
Me reweth sore of hendy Nicholas
He shal be rated of his studying,
If that I may, by Jesus, heven, king.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3458.

Then when the time came of his appearance befor the chancellor, he threatned him grievously, reuiling and rating him as though he had bin a dog.—Fox. Martyrs, an. 1536.

But chiefly Paridell his hart did grate
To heare him threaten so despihtfully,
As if he did a dogge in kenell rate
That durst not barke.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill, or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating the child for it, which makes him not sufficiently distinguish whether your dislike be not more directed to him than his fault.

Locke. Of Education, s. 77.

The good woman on her return, finding her cakes all burnt, rated the king [Alfred] very severely, and upbraided him, that he always seemed very well pleased to eat her warm cakes, though he was thus negligent in toasting them.
Hume. History of England, vol. i. c. 2.

The rather lambes bene starved with cold,
All for their maister is lustlesse and old.
Id. The Shepheard's Calender. Februarie.

— I'd rather have that man [Cato]
Approve my deeds, than worlds for my admirers.
Addison. Cato, Act ii. sc. 1.

These injunctions of the suspension of the labours of the lower ranks are universally and perpetually in force, in all parts of the world, and in all ages; the rather, as they are no less calculated for the benefit of the higher than the comfort of the lower orders.—Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

RATH, from the context, appears to have been a round hill, made ready or prepared, "strongly trenched and throwne up, and ordained" for assembling.

There is a great use amongst the Irish, to make great assemblies together upon a rath or hill there to parlie (as they say) about matters and wrongs betweene township and township, or one privat person and another.
Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

To settle, to affirm or confirm, to establish, to assure or secure, to warrant.

We declare and ordein that eche of the saied kynges on his partie shall ratifie, confirme, and approue all and euery the chapters and articles aboue saied.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 11.

The kyng of Englad sent Sir Nicholas Carew, knight, master of his horses, & Doctor Sypson, to Bononie, for the ratificacion of the league concluded at Cambray.
Id. Ib. an. 21.

Pray to the blacke-cloud-gathering god, [Idæan Jove,] that views
All Troy, and all her miseries; that he will digne to use
His most lov'd bird, to ratifie thy hopes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

That all stage-players were consecrated unto Bacchus as well as these their stage-playes, is a plenary ratification of my minors truth, to whiche our owne experience must subscribe.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 7.

Antiquity forgot, custome not knowne,
The ratifiers and props of euery word.
They cry, choose we; Laertes shall be king.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

In matters criminal, ratihibition or approving of the act does always make the approver gully.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

If I have willed it [a crime] directly and caus'd it to be done knowingly, or by some causality which I at any time us'd to that purpose, I am liable to all the evil that can be consequent to that sin: but if I be guilty only by ratihibition, that is, if really I did not command it, effect, or cause it to be effected, but only rejoice in it and use it when it is done, then my ratihibition is ordinarily (though very evil) yet much less than the other action.—Id. Ib.

You judge yourself, and I but keep record,
In place of law, while you pronounce the word.
Take your desert the death you have decreed,
I seal the doom, and ratify the deed.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

When our Saviour came to give a new law, though he did not abolish all the ceremonial laws of Moses, yet the law of the ten commandments he seems to have ratified and confirmed, and consequently that law which concerns the observation of a Sabbath.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

Doubt you my oath? yet more my faith to try,
A solemn compact let us ratify,
And witness ev'ry power that rules the sky.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

We never are satisfied with our opinions, whatever we may pretend, till they are ratified and confirmed by the suffrages of the rest of mankind.—Reynolds, Dis. 7.

That parte of phisicke called rationall, whereby is declared the faculties or powers of the body, the causes, accidents, and tokens of sykenesses, can nat always be sure, without some experience.

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 25.

But morall philosophy was his chiefest end; for the rational, the natural, and mathematicks, (the which he had greatly studied,) they were but simple pastimes in comparison of the other.—North. Plutarch, p. 984.

The empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store. The rationalists are like the spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels. But give me a philosopher who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue.—Bacon. Apophthegms.

Yea, the highest and most improved parts of rationality are frequently caught in the entanglements of a tenacious imagination; and submit to its obstinate but delusory dictamens.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 11.

Amongst [the Persians] the religious rites are performed rationaly by those that are ingenious, whilst the superficial vulgar look no further in the observation of them, than the external symbol or ceremony.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 315.

Scholars, and such as love to ratiocinate will have more and better matter to exercise their wits upon.

Sir W. Petty. Advice to Hartlib, (1648,) p. 22.

Let degenerated nature then fee her best advocate at this barre, he can but plead shape, speech, ratiocination to make himsele no beast.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

The conjunction of images with affirmations and negations, which make up propositions, and the conjunction of propositions one to another, and illation of conclusions upon them, is ratiocination or discourse.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 50.

Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connected to or found in the premisses that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, and as the eye sees his objects immediately and without any previous discourse.—Id. Ib. p. 51.

Can those then be enthusiasts who profess to follow reason? Yes, undoubtedly, if by reason they mean only conceits. Therefore such persons are now commonly called reasonists and rationalists, to distinguish them from true reasoners or rational inquirers.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 67.

One attribute may perhaps rationaly be considered as prior in conception to another, and existence as prior to all.

Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 447.

For nature by her subtlety oftentimes transcends and illudes the greatest subtlety of human ratiocinations.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 424.

Now in this consists the ratio and essential ground of the gospel doctrine.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

With piety begins all good on earth;
'Tis the first-born of rationality.

Young. Complaint, Night 8.

The schoolmen make a third act of the mind which they call ratiocination, and we may stile it the generation of a judgement from others actually in our understanding.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 11. s. 13.

RATTLE, v. } Dut. Ratelen, strepere, gar-RA'TTLE, n. } rire; rateler, garrulus; to make RA'TTLING, n. } a noise, to chatter. It is the dim. of rate, to scold.

To scold, to chide; to speak noisily, loudly, or clamorously; to make a noise, din, or clamour. (Used generally of the noise from the collision of hard substances, as of stones.)

Balde Rupilie he rattles vp to combat if he darres.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 7.

Where as commonlie by the rattling of his bones within the toome is portended the death of popes, as the common report goeth.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 151. an. 1066.

And off my mourning-robos: grief, to the grave,
For I haue gold, and therefore will be brave:
In silks I'll rattle it of every colour.

Cook. Green. Tu quoque.

But hereafter when his force
Shall wield the rattle and the horse,
Twill ravish the delighted sense
To view the sports of innocence.

Cartwright. To Mr. W. B.

The dissoluteness of our lascivious, impudent, rattle-pated gadding females now is such, as if they had purposely studied to appropriate to themselves king Solomon's memorable character.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act v

— She said, and vanished from her place,
The sheaf of arrows shook, and rattled in their case.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Whose frenzies must be reconciled
With drums and rattles like a child.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

Its humble method nothing has of fierce,
But hates the rattling of a lofty verse.
Their native beauty pleases, and excites,
And never with harsh sounds the ear affrights.

Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 2.

They revolted from him while the peals of thunder that proclaimed his descent on the mountain rattled in their ears, and while he dictated his laws to them.

Bolingbroke. Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

When swift the harpies to their prey return,
As swift Astolpho to the rattling horn
His lips applies.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxiii.

In the churches and chapels which adjoin the public streets, the sharp rattle of the whirling phaeton, and the graver rumble of the loaded waggon, mixed with the oaths and imprecations of the bawling drivers, disturb the congregation, and stun the voice of the preacher.

Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

RA'VAGE, v. } Fr. Ravager, ravir. See RA'VAGE, n. } RAP, or RAPE, to reave, to RA'VAGER. } tear away. See also RAVEN, and RAVISH.

To reave or rob; to plunder, to despoil, to lay waste.

We come not, mighty queen, an hostile band,
With sword and fire, and ravaging the land,
To bear your spoils triumphant to the shore.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

Perhaps, when flames their dreadful ravage make,
Or groaning earth shall from the centre shake,
When blasting dews the rising harvest seize,
Or nations sicken with some dire disease.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

through his lande, he caused Ludwallis, prynce or kyng of Walys, to yelde to hym yerely, by waye of trybute, ecc.
woluys.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 193.

So greute a hatred toward the Romayns hadde the greadie rauenousnesse of their proconsules, the pollyng and shauing of their tolle gatherers, the wrongfull delyng in sutes, and controuersies of the lawe of their officers, rooted in the hartes of them all.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 146.

What herce or steed, said he, should he have dight,
But be entombd in the rauen or the knight!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

As when a gryfon, seized of his pray,
A dragon fiers encountreth in his flight,
Through widest ayre, making his ydle way,
That would his rightfull ravine rend away.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 5.

The rauer from their flockes.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

And as keene dogs keepe sheep in cotes, or folds of hurdles bound:
And grin at every breach of ayre, envious of all that moves:
Still listning when the ravenous beast stalks through the hilly groves. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

Whence timorous beasts, through hills and lawns pursued,
By artful shifts the ravening foe elude.

For with hot ravine fir'd, ensanguin'd man
Is now become the lion of the plain.
And worse. Thomson. Spring.

And the hoarse raven on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left presag'd the coming blow.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 1.

The curiosity of the one, like the hunger of the other, de-uours ravenously and without distinction whatever falls in its way, but neither of them digests.
Bolingbroke. Of studying History, Let. 4.

His plumes were inky black, of vast extent:
His hooky claws on spoil and ravine bent.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 173.

Brutus, Colatinus, Lucretius, and other nobles of the citie, at the last braste out, and takynge occasion of the rauishe-ment, all thoughte the king were therto not partie, they vtterly expulsed him for ever out of the citie.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

At last, quite ravisht with delight to heare
The royall ofspring of his native land,
Cryde out; Deare countrey! O how dearely deare Ought thy remembrance and perpetuall band
Be to thy foster childe.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

Is justice fled from heaven? Can that permit
A foul deformed ravisher to sit Upon her virgin cheek, and pull from thence
The rose-buds in their maiden excellence?
Carew. Upon the Sickness of E. S.

A man that hath not experienced the contentments of innocentive piety, the sweetnesses that dew the soul by the influencies of the spirit, and the ravishings that sometimes from aboute do shoot abroad in the inward man, will hardly believe there are such oblectations that can be hid in godliness.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 66.

And heard within, the goddesse eleuate
A voice diuine, as at her web she wrought.
Subtle, and glorious, and past earthly thought;
As all the houswiferies of Deities are.
To heare a voice, so ravishingly rare.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

But the faire lady, overcommon quight
Of huge affection, did in pleasure melt,
And in sweet ravishment pour'd out her spright.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Who now but Palamon exults with joy,
And ravished Arcite seems to touch the sky.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

—He lov'd the knight,
But sovereign monarchs are the source of right,
Mov'd by the damsel's tears and common cry,
He doomed the brutal ravisher to dye.

No newellie practised worshippinges alloweth he for hys, but vtterlye abhorreth them all as thinges rawe and unsauerye.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Thus muche did the Lorde Jesus speake vnder a figure qualifying and tempering his wordes to the rawnesse of his disciples, whiche rawenes he suffered for these causes to remaine a long season in them.—Udal. Luke, c. 22.

Ham. Sir, his definement suffers no perdition in you;— though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory; and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick sail.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

Some [crying] vpon their children rawly left.
Id. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 1.

Why in that rawnesse left you wife and childe?
Those precious motiues, those strong knots of loue,
Without leaue-taking. Id. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

Who was to weete a wretched wearish elfe.
With hollow eyes and rawbone cheekes forspent,
As if he had in prison long bene pent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Anom. Alas! how should I do otherwise, that lie all night with such a raw-boned skeleton as memory, and run all day on his errands?—Brewer. Lingua, Act iii. sc. 2.

And what does it signify for the observator to set his raw conceptions and fond reasonings upon the meaning of a word, against such valuable authorities.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 27.

I warn'd thee, but in vain, for well I knew What perils youthful ardour would pursue:
That boiling blood would carry thee too far;
Young as thou wert to dangers, raw to war.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. 11.

RAY, n. } See RADIANT. Fr. Ray, rayer;
RAY, v. } It. Raggio, raggiare; Sp. Rayo, RAYLESS. } rayar; from the Lat. Radius, radiare.
RAYON.

To throw forth or eject; to shoot forth; to emit lines or beams of light; to enlighten; to mark, to streak or stripe (with such lines); to radiate, (qv.)

Rays—is applied by our old poets to the eyes of ladies: from the lustre that darts from them.

If he wold make sleepe alite,
Of downe of pure doues white,
I wold yeue him a feather bed,
Raid with gold, and right well clad,
In fine blacke sattin d'outre mere.—Chaucer. Dreame.

A bird all fedred blew and greene,
With bright rayes like gold betwene,
As small thred ouer every joynt. Id. Ib.

The rayes or beames issuinge from the eyen of her, whom ye have chosen, with the remembraunce of her incomparable vertues, hath thrilled through out the middes of my hart.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

And now, though on the sunne I drive,
Whose fervent flame all thinges decaies,
His beames in brightness may not strive,
With light of your swete golden raies.
Surrey. The Constante Louer lamenteth.

And now (with care) I can record those dayes,
And call to mind the quiet lyfe I led,
Before I first beheld thy golden rayes
When thine vntrueth yet troubled not my hed.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholmew of Bathe.

For when she spied my ladies golden rayes
Into the clouds,
Her head she shroudes,
And shamed to shine where she her beames displaies.
Id. A Mooneshyne.

There did this lucklesse mayd seven months abide,
Ne ever evening saw, ne morning's ray,
Ne ever from the day the night descride,
But thought it all one night, that did no houre divide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11

Nor brick nor marble was the wall in view;
But shining christall, which from top to base
Out of her womb a thousand rayons threw.
Id. Vision of Bellay.

Methinks I see his mountain spirit, freed
From tangling earth, regain the realms of day,
Its native country, whence, to bless mankind, Eternal Goodness, on this darksome spot,
Had ray'd it down a while.
Thomson. To the Memory of Lord Talbot.

You object "that he describes this very doctrine in a way directly condemned by Justin Martyr, and even by Athanasius himself, for Gnostic or Sabellian; making the Holy Ghost an emanation like a ray shot forth from the sun, flowing from it and returning to it."
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 73.

Bodies, in respect of light, may be divided into three sorts: first those that emit rays of light, as the sun and fixt stars; secondly, those that transmit the rays of light, as the air; thirdly, those that reflect the rays of light, as iron, earth, &c. The first are called luminous, the second pellucid, and the third opaque.
Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

Night, sable goddess! from her ebon throne,
In rayless majesty, now stretches forth
Her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world.
Young. Night Thoughts, Night 1.

RAY, n. } A. S. Wrig-an; to wrie, to cover,
RAY, v. } to cloak; ray or array is applied RAYMENT. } both to the dressing of the body of an individual, and to the dressing of a body of armed men, (Tooke.)

To wrie, ray, or array is,—to cover, to cloak, to dress, to set in order.

To ray or beray,—to cover, (sc.) with dirt, with filth; and thus, consequentially,—

To dirty, to befoul; to bespatter with dirt.

Now ben the priestis pokes so wide
Men must enlarge the vestiment,
The holy gospel they doen hide
For the contrarien in raiment.
Chaucer. The Plowmannes Tale, pt. iii.

I shal leaue him [Tindall] for hys part a while in the myre in whiche hymselfe hath overthrowen hys matter, and shall shew you shortly how angrely he ryseth vp and royally rayed in dirt.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 614.

Cesar placed his footemen in battell ray before his camp.
Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 223.

Pitfull spectacle of deadly smart,
Beside a bubling fountain low she lay,
Which shee increased with her bleeding hart,
And the cleane waves with purple gore did ray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

From his soft eyes the tears he wypt away,
And from his face the filth that did it ray.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 5.

Gru. Fie, fie on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all foule waies: was euer man so beaten? was euer man so raide? was euer man so weary?
Shakespeare. The Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 1.

The wyld wood gods, arrived in the place,
There find the virgin, doofull, desolate,
With ruffled rayments, and fayre blubbed face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Isab. Too good for you: do you think to famish me,
Or keep me like an alms-woman in such rayment,
Such poor unhandsome weeds?
Beaumont & Fletcher. Women Pleased, Act i. sc. 1.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies,
And is of least advantage when she dies.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

RE, in composition, means ere, before; as to re-act, (sc.) any thing acted before; and consequentially, to act again.—It may be prefixed to verbs or nouns, as need may require.

RE-ACCE/SS. Ad, and ced-ere, cessum, to go. Access,—motion to or towards, again; return.

For to let passe the quailing and withering of all things by the recesse, and their reviving and resurrection (as it were) by the reaccess of the sunne; I am of opinion that the sap in trees so precisely followes the motion of the sun, that it never rests, but is in continuall agitation as the sun it selfe.—Hakewell. Apologie, b. ii. c. 1.

RE-ACCU/SE, v. Ad, causa, a cause, a charge.

To bring again a cause, or case, or charge against.

RE-ACT, v. } Lat. Agere, actum, to do.
REACTION. } To act or do again, or back REACTION. } upon; to operate upon again;
to return or remit the action or operation.

For if this were true, then would every thing that suffered and re-acted motion, especially polite bodies, as looking-glasses, have something both of sense and of understanding in them.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 731.

Whence it is plain that alwaies corporeal re-action or collision precedes perception, and that every perception is a kind of feeling, which lasts so long as this resistance or impress of motion lasts.—More. Immortality of the Soul, Pref.

For sense being nothing else, as some conceit, but motion, or rather re-action of a body pressed upon by another body, it will follow that all the matter in the world has in some manner or other the power of sensation.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 12.

But, if the son re-acts the father's crimes

READMI/SSION. } To give leave again to enter; to grant, allow, or suffer to be again brought in or forward; to assent again.

— These evils I deserve and more,
Acknowledge them from God inflicted on me
Justly, yet despair not of his final pardon
Whose ear is ever open; and his eye
Gracious to re-admit the suppliant.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

To shun them, in their holy meetings especially, till many and great evidences, both of their sorrow for what they had done, and of their amendment for the time to come, had procured them re-admittance.
Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 10.

Fran. That, whilst your pride of heart
Prolongs his re-admission, his despair Urge him not to some precipitate attempt.
Digby. Elvira, Act iii.

That leads to Nature's great metropolis,
And readmits us, through the guardian hand
Of elder brothers, to our Father's throne.
Young. Complaint, Night 9.

RE-ADO/PT, v. Fr. Re-adopter; Lat. Adoptare; to choose.

To choose again, or take again by choice.

When shall my soul her incarnation quit
And, re-adopted to thy blest embrace, Obtain her apotheosis in thee?
Young. Complaint, Night 9.

RE-ADORN, v. See ORN, and ADORN. Lat.
Ad, orn-are; to deck or decorate.

To deck or decorate, or embellish.
Behold, the streams now change their languid blue,
Regain their glory, and their flame renew;
With scarlet honours readorned, the tide Leaps on.
Blackmore. Creation, b. vi.

RE-ADVANCE, v. Fr. Avancer; to put, to bring, into the van, or front.

To forward, to move, to put or bring forward again; to move, to bring again into the front or van.

Which if they misse, they yet should re-advance
To former height, and there in circle tarrie,
Till they be sure to make the foole their quarrie.
B. Jonson. Epig. To Sir H. Goodyere.

RE-ADVE/RTENCY. Lat. Advertere; to turn to.

A turning again to or towards, (sc.) with a design to look at, mark, or observe.

Memory—he does not make to be a recovery of ideas that were lost, but a re-advertency or reapplication of mind to ideas that are actually there, though not attended to.

Of or pertaining to things, as opposed to persons; to facts as opposed to fiction; in law, opposed to personal: see the quotation from Blackstone.

Realists,—a sect of philosophers, (opposed to Nominalists;) qui in rebus, non in vocibus, veram positam esse Philosophiam asserebant, (Du Cange.)

It is ful fayre to ben ycleped madame,
And for to gon to vigiles all before,
And have a mantel reallish ybore.
Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 380.

But telleth me what mistere men ye ben.
That ben so hardy for to fighten here
Withouten any juge, other offiere,
As though it were in listes reallie.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1715.

Hee exhorted him to beleue the reality of the sacrament after the consecration.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1159. an. 1543.

The bread therefore changeth not to his essence, but is bread reallie, and is the bodie of Christ sacramentallie.
Id. Ib. p. 456. Walter Brute.

It will be as hard to apprehend, as that an empty wish should remove mountains; a supposition which, if realized, would releave Sisyphus.—Glanvill. Van. of Dogmat. c. 3.

—We clearly see

The nearly couching of each reallie,
And the Creatour's close propinquitie
To ev'ry creature.—More. Song of the Soul, pt. i. b. ii. s. 12.

Our simple ideas are all real, all agree to the reality of things.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 29.

Such for instance was the dispute between the Thomists and the Scotists about the immaculate conception of the Virgin, and that between the Nominalists and the Realists about the nature of universals.

Bolingbroke. Authority in Matters of Religion, Ess. 4.
There is no arguing from ideal to real existence, unless it could first be shown, that such ideas must have their objective realities, and cannot be accounted for, as they pass within, except it be by supposing such and such real existence, ad extra, to answer them.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 435.

Things real are such as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as lands and tenements.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. xi. c. 2.

Our Lord himself called not this general principle in question, any more than the writers of the Old Testament call in question the reality of the miracles of the Egyptian magicians.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

'Tis grave philosophy's absurdest dream
That heaven's intentions are not what they seem;
That only shadows are dispersed below,
And earth has no reality but woe.
Cowper. Hope.

Death that absolves my birth, a curse without it:
Rich death, that realizes all my cares,
Toils, virtues, hopes, without it a chimera!
Young. Complaint, Night 3.

After the death of Abelard, through whose abilities and eloquence the sect of Nominalists had enjoyed for a few years a very splendid triumph, the system of the Realists began to revive, and it was soon so completely re-established in the schools as to prevail with little or no opposition till the fourteenth century.—Stewart. Human Mind, c. 4. s. 3.

REALM. } Fr. Royaume; It. Reame; Sp.
REAL. } Realme; Lat. Regnum, from rex, RE'ALTY. } qui regit, (regens, regs, rex;) he who rules, a king.

Realm,—the land, territory, or country ruled or governed; a kingdom; the dominion or government of a king.

Real is (Chaucer) royal; reality,—royalty, (Milton.)

He is brother eldest, the reame forto were.
R. Brunne, p. 85.

For thy ich counsaile no kyng, eny consaile aske
A conscience yf he coveteth, to conquere a reome.
Piers Plouhman, p. 51.

Of his linage am I, and his offspring

Therein were birdes mo I wene,
Than been in all the realme of Fraunce.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

While that by fate his state in stay did stand,
And when his realm did flourish by advise,
Of glorie then we bare some fame and brute.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

The whiles his life ran forth in bloudie streame,
His soule descended downe into the Stygian reame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

O heav'n! that such resemblance of the Highest Should yet remain, where faith and reallie Remain not.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

This Flecknoe found, who, like Augustus, young,
Was call'd to empire, and had govern'd long;
In prose and verse was own'd, without dispute,
Through all the realms of nonsense, absolute.
Dryden. Mac-Flecknoe.

His realm is declared to be an empire and his crown imperial, by many Acts of Parliament, particularly the statutes 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12, and 25 Hen. VIII. c. 28, which at the same time declare the king to be the supreme head of the realm in matters both civil and ecclesiastical.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

REAM. Fr. Rame; It. Resima, resma; Sp. Remo; A. S. Ream; Dut. and Ger. Riem, ligamentum, vinculum. Hence, (says Lye,) ream, a bundle of paper; as much as can be conveniently contained by one bandage (ligatura).

Turn with me to my twentieth year, for then
The lover's frenzy ruled the poet's pen;
When virgin reams were soild with lays of love,
The flinty hearts of fancied nymphs to move.
Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. vii.

RE-A'NIMATE, v. Lat. Animus; Gr. Aveuos, breath, spirit.

To give breath, spirit, life—again; to relive or revive; to inspirit, to enliven again.

The sages of old live again in us; and in opinions there is a metempsychosis. We are our re-animated ancestors and antedate their resurrection.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

Variety re-animates the attention, which is apt to languish under a continual sameness.—Reynolds, Dis. 8.

RE-ANNE'X, v. } Lat. Annect-ere, to bind REANNE'XING, n. } or knit (nect-ere) to.
To bind, fasten, or unite again.

King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to re-purchase and re-annex that duchie.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 40.

The French ambassadors were dismissed; the king avooiding to understand any thing touching the re-annexing of Britaine, as the ambassadors had avooided to mention it.
Id. Ib. p. 45.

RE-ANO'INT, v. Fr. Oindre; Lat. Inungere.
To rub again with ointment, with oil or oily substance.

And Edward now to see his crown sat right,
Proud in his spoils, to London doth repair,
And re-anointed mounts th' imperial chair.
Drayton. The Miseries of Q. Margaret.

REAP'ING, n. } (reaf-ian;) to rip or reap; Goth. Raupyan.

To rip or reave, to cut; applied, met. (from reaping and gathering the harvest,) to collect, to gather, to gain.

A rybibour and a ratoner, a raker and hus knave
A repé and, &c.
Piers Plouhman, p. 106.

Suffre ye hem bothe wexe into repyng tyme: and in tyme of rype corn I schal sey to the reapers, first gadere ye togidere the tares and bynde hem togidere in knyches to be brent; but gedre ye whete into my berne.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 13.

Let both grow together tyll haruest come, and in tyme of haruest, I wyll saye to the reapers, gather ye first the tares, and bind them in sheues to be brente; but gather the wheate into my berne.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

These noble reapers, as good workmen and worthy their hier, han al draw and bounde vpp in the sheues, and made many shokes.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

And springyng herbes reapt up with brasen sithes
Were sought after the right course of the moone.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. iv.

In all other quarters ye corn was reaped down, and none stading any where saue in thys one place.
Goldinge. Caesar, p. 104.

There is more pain and labour about the tilling and sowing, thē in the haruest and reaping.—Udal. John, c. 4.

—When perils all I weened past,
And I hop'd to reape the crop of all my care,
Into new woes unweeting I was cast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

The corn the greedy reapers cut not down
Before the fields with golden ears it crown;
Nor doth the verdant fruits the gardener pull;
But thou art crop't before thy ears were full.
Drummond. On the Death of Sir W. Alexander.

He, then his fancy with autumnal scenes
Amusing, chanc'd beside his reaper train
To walk.
Thomson. Autumn

The difficulties they must encounter are nine times more and greater than ever; and the prospects of interest, after the reapings and gleanings of so many years, nine times less.—Swift. The Examiner, No. 18.

The morning workman always best succeeds,
The morn the reaper and the trav'ler speeds.
Cooke. Hesiod. Works & Days, b. ii.

RE-APPEAR, v. To appear again.

To mute and to material things
New life revolving summer brings;
The genial call dead nature hears,
And in her glory re-appears.—Scott. Marmion, c. i. Introd.

RE-APPRO'ACH, v. To come very near to (ad proximum).

To come again towards; used by Bacon. See RECOMPOSE.

REAR, v. } A. S. Rær-an, araran; to raise.
REAR'ER. } Junius thinks rear and raise are REAR'ING, n. } the same word; and he adduces instances of the interchange of the letters r and s. See TO RAISE.

In Chaucer, "rerid up al the town," is—raised or roused, &c. "To rere war" (in Goldinge)—raise or levy war; and in all the other examples rear is equivalent to raise, rouse. In the second from Spenser, rear or raise is (consequently) lift, (qv.)—to take up or off; and, hence, to carry away.

And Tours the gode knygt, that so muche fole er slowg,
Brut lette brynge on erthe with honoure y nowg,
And lette a fair tabernacle in honour of hym rere,
And fair hous al abouten hym, and bi gan the cite there.
R. Gloucester, p. 20.

Y buried he was at London, that he lette first rere.
Id. p. 23.

And he hath rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.—Wiclif. Luk. c. 1.

And ran into the town, and made an hideouse cry,
And chargit all the cetezins to armys for to hy
From o strete tyl anothir, and rerid up al the town,
And made the trompis blowe up and the bellis soun.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Which masse he willed to be reared hye
Toward the skies, and ribbed all with oke.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

That erst we rered vpp we undermyne againe.
Id. Ecclesiastes, c. 2. p. 355.

They were not in any hope that the citeye wold hastelye consent to rere war.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 201.

Cesar put them in remembrance, that about the same time the last yere before, the Bellouacanes and thother cities of Gallia rered war.—Id. Ib. fol. 254.

For not one puffe of winde there did appeare;
That all the three theerat woxe much afraide,
Unweeting what such horroure straunge did reare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

He, in an open turney lately held,
Fro me the honour of that game did reare;
And having me, all wearie earst, downe feld,
The fayrest ladie reft, and ever since withheld.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

Swift as the word the parting arrow sings,
And bears thy death, Antinous, on its wings;
Wretch that he was, of unprophetic soul,
High in his hands he reared the golden bowl;
Ev'n then to drain it lengthen'd out his breath,
Changed to the deep, the bitter, draught of death.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. 22.

He's a young plant, in his first year of bearing,
But his friend swears he will be worth the rearing.
Dryden. Prol. 38.

On Pholoë thus the rearer of the steed,
When the kind Spring renews his gen'rous breed,
With joy views these strain up the mountain steep,
Those with their dams contend, or dare the deep.
Lewis. Statius. The Thebaid, b. x.

REAR, adj. A. S. Hreah, hrere, raw; generally applied to things insufficiently cooked or dressed.

Undone; not done enough.

REA

In Kent, rathe, raid, and rear, pronounced rare, are early, soon, (Grose;) and thus rear (in Gay) may be a corruption of rather, raer, rare.

If they [eggs] be rere, they do clense the throate and brest.
Sir T. Elgot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 13.

RE-ASCE/ND, v. } Lat. Ascendere, (ad, and REASCE/NT, n. } scandere,) to go up to.
To go, to come, to move upwards,—again; to climb, to mount again.

And, when as night hath us of light forlorne,
I wish that day would shortly re-ascend.—Spenser, son. 86.

Thus pour'd the goddesse sleepe into his eyes,
And re-ascended the Olympian skies.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

From where the bright Athenian turrets rise,
He mounts aloft and re-ascends the skies.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

Fatigued with traversing the mazy grove,
Here, ere she re-ascends the courts of Jove,
The chaste Diana, huntress of the wood,
Bathes her fair limbs, and gambols in the flood.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. ii.

Hence the declivity is sharp and short,
And such the re-ascend; between them weeps
A little Naiad her impoverished urn
All summer long, which winter fills again.

For this is one of the ancientest laws among them; that no man shall be blamed for reasoning in the maintenance of his own religion.—Sir T. More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 11.

Let youre goodnesse or reasonableness bee from refuge or succour vnto my foolishnesse.—Udal. Flowres, fol. 163.

Therefore I wish of God, that all our reasoning might be fastened upon such matters as are necessarie, both for the hearer to learne, and also good for the goodly reasoner to teach.—Wilson. Logike, fol. 89.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscaried
A vessell of our countrey richly fraught.
Shakespeare. The Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 8.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of Reason she obtains by this:
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fix'd, she Understanding is.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul.

Amint. I dare not stay thy language;
In midst of all my anger and my grief,

Reason, which in base bonds my folly hath enthralld,
I straight in council call'd,
Like some old faithful friend whom long ago
I had cashier'd to please my flattering fair.
Otway. The Poet's Complaint of his Muse.

The word reason, in the English language, has different significations: sometimes it is taken for true and clear principles; and sometimes for the cause, and particularly the final cause: but the consideration I shall have of it here is in a signification different from all these, and that is, as it stands for a faculty in man, that faculty whereby man is supposed to be distinguished from beasts, and wherein it is evident he much surpasses them.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 17.

A poem with so bold a title, and a name prefixed from which the handling of so serious a subject would not be expected, may reasonably oblige the author to say somewhat in defence both of himself and of his undertaking.
Dryden. Religio Laici, Pref.

Being to defend the reasonableness of our constancy, by the greatness of the rewards we expect for it, it was very proper to represent those celestial recompenses, under the notion of such goods as those we argued with, acknowledged to be the most noble and desirable.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 302.

But lest we should not here due reverence pay
To learned Epicurus, see the way
By which this reasoner, of such high renown,
Moves through th' ecliptic road the rolling sun.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

Can those then be enthusiasts who profess to follow reason? Yes, undoubtedly, if by reason they mean only conceits. Therefore such persons are now commonly called reasonists and rationalists, to distinguish them from true reasoners and rational inquirers.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 67.

The word reason itself is far from being precise in its meaning. In common and popular discourse it denotes that power by which we distinguish truth from falsehood, and right from wrong, and by which we are enabled to combine means for the attainment of particular ends.
Stewart. Of the Human Mind.

The adjective reasonable, as employed in our language, is not liable to the same ambiguity as the substantive from which it is derived. It denotes a character in which reason (taking it in its largest acceptation) possesses a decided ascendancy over the temper and passions; and implies no particular propensity to a display of the discursive power, if indeed it does not exclude the idea of such a propensity.
Id. Ib.

He rested not the evidence of his doctrine upon mere argument, nor did he think to persuade by mere eloquence; for argument alone, although it might indeed evince the consistency and reasonableness of the doctrine, could never amount to a proof of its heavenly origin.
Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 14.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

For rebellion being an opposition, not to persons, but authority, which is founded only in the constitution and laws of the government; those, whoever they be, who by force break through, and by force justify their violation of them, are truly and properly rebels. For when men, by entering into society and civil government, have excluded force, and introduced laws for the preservation of property, peace, and unity amongst themselves; those who set up force again in opposition to the laws, do rebel, that is, bring back again the state of war, and are properly rebels.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8.

With no less time or labour can Destiny build up such a man,
Who's with sufficient virtue fill'd
His ruin'd countrie to rebuild.
Cowley. On his Majesty's Restoration.

The greatest tree that to this day had euer bene knowne or seene at Rome, was that which, being brought with other timber for the rebuilding of the foresaid bridge called Naumachiaris, Tiberius Caesar commanded to be landed and laid abroad in view for a singular and miraculous monument to all posteritie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 40.

We might in reason have thought that their infidelity would have been buried in the ashes of their Temple; when they had such plain predictions that the Messiah was to come during the second Temple, that the prediction of Christ concerning the destruction of this Temple was so exactly fulfilled, that all attempts for the rebuilding of it were vain and fruitless.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 8.

The vanity of the attempt could only be equalled by its impiety, for it was designed to give the lie to God, who, by the mouth of his prophets, had foretold that it should never be rebuilt.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. c. 5.

In that he [Peter] taught the gentils by his example to plaie the Jews, Paule the doctour of the gentils did declare him therein to be rebukeable.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 204. an. 1171.

Nothyng more rebukeable, if ye respect fame. Nothing more pernicious, if ye mark the example.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Remember the rebukes wherewith wee are scorned all the daie long of foolishhe rebukers.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1166. an. 1558.

Sharpe rebuking of our adversarie or frupes giuen before

Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1399.

On which when gazing him the palmer saw,
He much rebukt those wand'ring eyes of his,
And, counsel'd well, him forward thence did draw.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Certainly they deserve to be well chastised for their perverse judgement, and one rebuke is not sufficient.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 3.

These great rebukers of non-residence, among so many distant cures, were not ashamed to be seen so quickly pluralists and non-residents themselves, to a fearful condemnation doubtless by their own mouths.
Milton. History of Britain, b. iii.

Till angry Neptune, looking o'er the main,
Rebukes the tempest, calms the waves again,
Their vessels from the dangerous quicksand steer.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

— His master lust

And seems dethroned and vanquished.—Cowper. Task, b. v.

RE-BUOY, v. To buoy, to float, to raise, to sustain, to elevate—again.

— Some, with hope replenish'd and rebuoy'd Return to whence they came—with like intent,
And weave their web again.—Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

RE-BU'RY, v. i. e. to bury again.

He caused her body to be re-buried in St. Maries Church in Oxford, with great pomp and solemnity.
Ashmole. Berk. vol. i. p. 154.

RE'BUS. Fr. Rebus; which (says Cotgrave) be "representations of ordinary or odd things, accompanied with mottoes or words, which, as they stand, seem to make a sentence." And see the quotation from Camden.

For whereas a poesie is a speaking picture, and a picture a speechlesse poesie, they which lackt wit to expresse their conceit in speech, did vse to depaint it out (as it were) in pictures, which they called rebus, by a Latine name well fitting their deuice.—Camden. Remaines. Rebus.

RE-BUT, v. } It. Ributtare; Fr. Rebuter; to REBU'TTER. } repulse, repel, foil, drive; put or thrust back, (Cotgrave.)

To the entent yt his aduersaries in no wise should haue

REC

Their steeds doe stagger, and amazed stand;
And eke themselves, too rudely rigorous,
Astonied with the stroke of their owne hand,
Doe backe rebutte, and each to other yealdeth land.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a sur-rejoinder, upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a sur-rebutler.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

RE-CA'DENCY. A going down again; a falling back.

For one patern of relapse and retrogradation, substracteth so much from the efficacy of such examples, as that defection is apt to render many sincere progressions in the first fervor, suspected of unsoundness and recadency.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes. Address to the Court.

RE-CALL, v. } Dut. Kallen; Sw. Kalla.
RECALL, n. } To call, to summon back, to revoke, to retract.

Here Guy, his better spirits recalling to his aid,
Came fresh upon his foe. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

But when diuision them recalls,
They bend their course to seu'rall ends,
Into dry earth the body falls,
The feruent soule to heav'n ascends.
Beaumont. A Funerall Hymne out of Prudentius.

No more be troubl'd how to quit the yoke
Of God's Messiah; those indulgent laws
Will not be now voutsafte, other decrees
Against thee are gon forth without recall.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

And though it be true, that in his retractions he recalleth and correcteth this; yet was this only a scrupulosity in that pious father, concerning the meer word, because he no where found in scripture Angels called by the name of souls.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 812.

There the blest day of his recall
Is annually a festival. Cooper. Ververt, c. 4.

RE-CANT, v. } Fr. Chanter, rechanter, to RE-CANTATION. } sing or chant again; to re-RE-CANTER. } hearse; deschanter, to recall, to revoke, to retract, what has been sung or said,—an opinion before avowed; to declare a change of opinion.

These trickes and manie such like are easy to be espied in this oration and preface, for a man to wonder and blesse him to se, how these incarnate diuils could so aduisedlie, so grauellie and so confidentlie say ye than, and so impudentlie, so rashlye, so periuredlie, and so slaightelie recant and saie
now.—Bp. Gardner. True Obedience. Pref. by M. Wood.

Which duke of Northumberlande, at the time of his death did recant his former life, and exhorted the people not to be ashamed to returne to the catholike faith.
Fabyan, vol. ii. p. 712. an. 1553.

And the kinge with publyk rescript and open recatacion
confessinge his synne setteth forth the glory of God.
Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 5.

Now for that this marriage proved happy and blessed, they were wont ever after in their wedding songs to recant and resound this name—Thalassius.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 704.

Till he recanted had his wicked rimes,
And made amends to her with treble praise.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

Luc. I come a penitent lover, with avow'd recantation to all former practises, and malicious endeavours, that I have wrought against you.—Marmion. Antiquary, Act iii. sc. 1.

—The publike body, which doth sildome
Play the re-canter.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 2.

Is it not essential in Dr. Clarke's scheme, and yours too?
What mean you then to deny that there are two gods?
Can you deny it without recanting all that you had said before?—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 51.

Here lighting upon Aurelius, bishop of Carthage, and St. Austin, he [Leporius] was by them brought to a sense of his error, and induced to sign a full recantation, called Libellus satisfactionis.—Id. Ib.

RE-CAPA'CITATE, v. Lat. Capax, that can or may take.
To enable again to take or occupy; to qualify
again.

There was another [amendment] which provided, that persons, recapacitating themselves by taking the oaths, should not come into the places out of which they were turned, if full.—Atterbury. Letter to Bp. Trevelyan.

RE-CAPITATE. Perhaps reheaded, re-entitled; headed, titled, directed again.

REC

Being yesterday from my friend advertis'd that your honour resided still in Padoa, and that my last were reca- pitated thither; I now proceed to effectuate your will.
Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 700.

RE-CAPITULATE, v. } Fr. Capituler, ré-
RECAPITULATION. } capituler; It. Capi-
RECAPITULATORY. } tolare, recapitolare; RECAPITULAR. } Sp. Capitular, reca- pitular.

To repeat the heads (capita) or chief points, or topics; to repeat, to rehearse, to reiterate.

Nowe to returne againe to our matters ecclesiasticall, fol-loweth in order to recapitulate and notifie the troubles and contentions growing betweene the same king and the pope.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 357. an. 1555.

These considerations (right reuerend) did first moue me to consent that these poems shoulde passe in print. For recapitulation whereof, and to answer vnto the objections that maie be geuen: I saie to the first, that I neither take example of a wanton Ouid, doting Nigidius, nor foolish Samocratius.—Gascoigne. To the Reuerend Diuines.

At the porte of Organant thou shalt fynde the bones of Lolliodorus, recapituler of the antike lawes, that was banyshed by Nero the cruell.—Golden Boke, Let. 12.

And she must recapitulate my shame,
And give a thousand by-words to my name.
Drayton. Elenor to D. Humphry.

D. Fer. Were e'er two friends engag'd in an adventure
So intricate as we, and so capricious?
D. Jul. Sure never in this world; methinks it merits
A special recapitulation. Digby. Elvira, Act iii.

This law is comprehensive and recapitulatory (as it were) of the rest concerning our neighbour, prescribing universal justice toward him (whence Saint Mark it seems meaneth to render it in one word, by μη αποστερησης, deprive not, or bereave not your neighbour of any thing.)
Barrow. An Exposition of the Decalogue.

What hath been done, or attempted to be done, both in the reign of King William and since, to prevent an undue influence on the elected, as well as on the electors, I need not recapitulate.—Bolingbroke. Upon Parties, Let. 18.

Hence we see the reason why creeds were no larger, nor more explicit, being but a kind of recapitulation of what the catechumens had been taught more at large, the main heads whereof were committed to memory, and publicly recited, and so became a creed.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 194.

RE-CA'PTION. Lat. Re, and capere, captum, to take.
The quotation explains the word.

Recaption or reprisal is another species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods and chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant;
in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

RE-CA'RNIFY, v. Lat. Caro, carnis, flesh.
To cause again to be or become flesh.

Then looking upon them [a herd of kine] quietly grazing up and down, I fell to consider that the flesh that is daily dish'd upon our tables is but concocted grass, which is recar- nified in our stomachs, and transmuted to another flesh.
Howell, b. ii. Let. 50.

RE-CA'RRY, v. Fr. Charier; Sp. Acarraiar.
To carry, bear, or convey back or again.

Christ ordained the supper to be a taking matter, an eating matter, a distributing and a remembring matter; contrary our massemen make it a matter not of taking, but of gazing, peeping, pining, boxing, carying, recarying, worshipping, stouping, kneeling, knocking, with stoupe downe before, hold up higher, I thanke God I see my Maker to-day, &c.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1271. an. 1553.

Which [ship or vessell] was supposed sufficient for the cariage and recariage of such necessities as should appertaine vnto his house.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 18.

RE-CAST, v. Sw. Kasta; Dan. Kaste.
To cast or throw back again; to reform or re-fashion; to mould or model again.

In the midst of their running race, they would cast and recast themselves from one to another horse.
Florio. Tr. of Montaigne, p. 155.

Your men of close application, though taking their terms from the common language, find themselves under a necessity of recasting them in a mould of their own to fit them for purposes that were not wanted in the usual intercourses of life.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

REC

RE-CEDE, v. } Lat. Re-ced-ere, to go back.
RECESS, n. } To go or move back; to RECESSION. } return, to retreat, to retire, to withdraw.

After whiche their recesse, the lorde Maxwell, warden of the West Marches of Scottlād, made proclamacion for good rule.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 34.

As the sun recedes, the moon and stars discover themselves; and when it returns they draw in their baffled beams, and hide their heads in obscurity.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 13.

All the resistance that this lax and disunited element could make, call it naturall or divine, (for words have no force) could no more keep down the above-said bullet from receding from the earth, then an army of the smallest flies stop a cannon-bullet flying in the aire.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 2.

Here in this despis'd recess
Would I, maugre winter's cold,
And the summer's worst excess,
Try to live. Cotton. The Retirement.

But by this pressing the conscience with omissions, I do not mean recessions or distances from states of eminency or perfection.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 5. s. 3.

When as abating something from the height and strictness of our pretences, and a favourable recession in such cases will greatly engage men to have an honourable opinion, and a peaceable affection toward us.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 29.

But, nymphs, recede! sage chastity denies
To raise the blush, or pain the modest eyes.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

It [sin] is the worst corruption and the greatest debase-ment of human nature that is possible, and farthest recession in the world from the divine perfections, from their approach to which all other perfections have their name and estimate.
Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Oft let the turf recede, and oft approach,
With varied breadth, now sink into the shade,
Now to the sun its verdant bosom bare.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

David was become a favourite of the people, and, on that account, the object of Saul's jealousy; to avoid the ill effects of which he prudently retired. During this recess Saul was seised with his disorder.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. Notes.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 303.

The receiving of the sacrament, as it noteth the act of him who receiveth, it may be that it neither avaleth or profiteth him who receiveth, nor any other, but also hurts the receiver, if he presume to take it rashly or unworthily.
Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. No. 25.

That they shoulde in the wynter season cause as manye newe shippes to be buylded as they could, and the olde to be mended, declaring of what receite and fasshyon he wold

The peripatetick matter is a pure unactuated power: and this conceited vacuum a meer receptibility.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, b. xvi.

And therefore we will acknowledge one speciall faculty of a spirit, which after penetration it doth either naturally or arbitrarily exert, which is this, to fill the receptivity or capacity of a body or matter so far forth as it is capable or receptive of a soul or spirit.
More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c. 3.

Because whatever is received is received according to the capacity of the recipient.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 725.

But by educing the affirmers only mean a producing in it, with a subjective dependence on its recipient: a very fine signification of education; which answers not the question whence 'tis derived, but into what it is received.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

And give a dosse for everie disease,
In prescripts long and tedious recipes,
All for so leane reward of art and me.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 4.

For when, after the death of his nephew Caligula, Claudius was in no small apprehension for his own life, he was, contrary to his expectation, well received among the Prætorian guards, and afterwards declared their emperor.
Addison. On Ancient Medals.

His reception is here recorded on a medal, in which one of the ensigns presents him his hand, in the same sense as Anchises gives it in the following verses.—Id. Ib.

Justification always supposes two parties, one to give, and another to receive, whether without any act at all on the receptive side, as in the case of infants, or whether accompanied by receptive acts, as in the case of adults, who may be properly said to accept and assent to as well as to receive and enjoy.—Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 428.

From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make.
Dryden, Ep. 13.

Something should have been inserted to signify that when the recipient is fitly qualified, and duly disposed, there is a salutary life-giving virtue annexed to the sacrament.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 423.

They who endeavour not to correct themselves, according to so exact a model, are just like the patients, who have open before them a book of admirable receipts for their diseases, and please themselves with reading it, without comprehending the nature of the remedies, or how to apply them to the cure.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

The unfrequented temples, spoiled of their immense treasures, sunk in ruins; and the images, stript of their gorgeous robes and costly jewels, were thrown into the Tyber, or into the common receptacles of filth and ordure.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 17.

Force is only another name for an efficient cause; it is that which impresses motion, the passive recipient of a foreign impulse.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 19.

RE-CE/LEBRATE, v. Fr. Célébrer; It. Celebrare; Sp. Celebrar; Lat. Celebrare, to proclaim, make known or renowned.

To commemorate again, as worthy of renown,
of honour, of praise.

Who did this knot compose,
Again hath brought the lilly to the rose;
And, with their chained dance,
Recelebrates the joyfull match with France.
B. Jonson. To Edward Filmer.

RE-CENSE, v. } Fr. Recenser; Lat. Re-
RECE/NSION. } censere, (re, and censere.)
To review, to revise, to re-examine, to reconsider.

Sixtus and Clemens, at a vast expence, had an assembly of learned divines to recense and adjust the Latin Vulgate.
Bentley, Let. 1. p. 232.

It is also observable, that in the recensions of the Roman bishops, sometimes the apostles are reckoned in, sometimes excluded.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

By this time we have made it unquestionably evident, that this opinion of incorporeal substance being vnextended, indistant, and devoid of magnitude, is no novel or recent thing.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 776.

But this inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apotheoses and origination of Gentile deities seems also too weak to bear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 167.

Those tubes, which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened.—Arbuthnot.

So also a scirrhus in its recency, whilst it is in its augment, requireth milder applications than the confirmed or inveterate one.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 19.

No more with thee in any mortal's cause
I combat, tho' thy favour'd Tydeus draws
On Hyllus, or should menace with his spear Amphitryon recent from the nether sphere.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. viii.

RE-CHARGE, v. Fr. Recharger, to give a new charge, a fresh charge unto; also (in English)—

To retort a charge or accusation, to charge or attack again.

Norfolk denies them peremptorily;
Her'ford recharg'd, and supplicates the king
To have the combat of his enemy.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

They charge, recharge, and all along the sea
They drive, and squander the huge Belgian fleet.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

RE-CHASE, v. Fr. Rechasser, to chase, or drive back, (Cotgrave.)

Within a while the hart found is Ihallowed, and recharged fast. Chaucer. Dreame.

Then these assail; then those recharge again:
Till stay'd with new-made hills of bodies slain.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

RECHEAT, or } Skinner derives from the RECHA/TE, v. } Fr. Rachet, redemptio, ra-cheter, redimere, to redeem, to recover; and, consequentially—

To revoke, to recall.

When you blow the death of your fox in the field, or covert, then must you sound 3 notes, with 3 windes, and recheat; mark you, sir, upon the same, with 3 windes.
Returne from Pernassus, Act ii. sc. 5.

Rechating with his horn, which then the hunter chears,
Whilst still the lusty stag his high-palm'd head upbeares.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

That I will have a recharge winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inuisible baldricke, all women shall pardon me.—Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act i. sc. 1.

RE-CHOOSE, v. A. S. Ceosan, to take, take out, or elect.

To elect or select again; to re-elect.

The patriots have triumphed with a quotation from an act of the 4th and 5th Anne, which permits those to be rechosen, whose seats are vacated by the acceptance of a place of profit.—Johnson. The False Alarm.

RECIDIVATION. Fr. Récidiver, to recidi-vate, to relapse, fall back or again, (Cotgrave.)
It. Recidivo; Lat. Recidivus, (re, and cadivus, from cadere, to fall.)

A falling back or again, a relapse.

Wo is mee; the swept house is repossessed with seven devils; this recidivation is desperate; although indeed there would not be a revolt without an inward unsoundnesse.
Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

RECIPROCAL, adj. } In our old writers,
RECIPROCAL, n. } reciproque. Fr. Réci-
RECIPROCALLY. } proque, reciproquer;

RECIPROCA/TION. } Lat. Reciprocus, reci- RECIPROCITY. } procare,—re, and pro- RECIPROCOUS. } care; (Vossius—from Festus;) reciprocare pro ultro citroque poscere uti sunt antiqui, quia procare est poscere.

To come and go alternately, (as the tide, to ebb and flow;) to act alternately or interchangeably; to return (in kind) one for another; to alternate, to interchange.

Reciproque is not uncommon in old documents.

The king is bound by the treaty; and if he will be helped by that treaty, he must do the reciproque.
Burnet, vol. ii. b. ii. King Edward's Rem.

It was answered thereto, that partly for the great zeal we have to the universal quiet of Christendom, which were very like to be established by that marriage; partly for the entire love and affection which we do bear to our good brother the French king, we could be content upon convenient reciproque.—Wyatt. The King to Sir T. Wyatt, 17th May, 1538.

And if the French king will not condescend to this reci- proque of the two points before expressed, then we have resolved that the overture in no wise be set forth by any our orators, or that they should affirm in any presence that we be agreeable that it should be proponed.—Id. Ib.

For the removing of which imparity, the cardinal acquainted Taylor, "That he had devised to make the band reciprocous and egal."
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. vol. i. b. i. c. 5.

But that this being sent into France, out of design to have particular resolution of their liking or disliking, no fruitful answer to the same was sent, but letters of instruction and commission, authorizing the French ambassador to conclude an obligation reciprocous, after such force as the instructions purported.—Id. Ib.

Had Thetis and Eurynome, in either's silver breast Not rescu'd me, Eurynome, that to her father had Reciprocally Oceanus.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Apollo answered: Strangers! though before Yee dwelt in wooddie Gnosus; yet no more Yee must be made, your own reciprocally
To your lou'd citty, and faire seueralls
Of wiues, and houses.—Id. Ib. A Hymne to Apollo.

Neither sunne nor shade, ne yet the light of candle, causeth them [emerauds] to change and loose their lustre:
but contrariwise, as they ever send out their own raies by little and little, so they entertaine reciprocally the visuall beames of our eyes; and for all the spissitude and thickenesse that they seeme to haue, they admit gently our sight to pierce into their bottome.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 5.

That we may not think this reciprocation into motion and rest belongs onely to terrestrial particles; that the heavens themselves be of the same matter, is apparent from the ejections of comets into our vortex, and the perpetuall rising of those spots and scum upon the face of the sun.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 11.

For the libration or reciprocation of the spirits in the tensility of the muscles would not be so perpetual, but cease in a small time, did not some more mystical principle then what is merely mechanical give assistance.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 10.

The Aristotelians, who believe water and air to be reciprocally transmutable, do thereby fancy an affinity between them, that I am not yet convinced of.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 342.

Subdued in fire the stubborn metal lies,
One brawny smith the puffing bellows plies,
And draws and blows reciprocating air.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

The censuring of heretics may often provoke them to return the like censures, and thus a kind of reciprocation of censures may be carried on to the great disturbance of the public peace, and the destruction of Christian charity.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 144.

On entering into society, it was stipulated, between the magistrate and the people, that protection and obedience should be the reciprocal conditions of each other.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. i. s. 2.

A law is a compact reciprocally made by the legislative powers; and therefore not to be abrogated but by all the parties.—Johnson. The False Alarm.

How is the union of any mind to any body to be understood, without a constant sympathy between the two, by virtue of which they are reciprocally appropriated to each other, in such sort that this individual mind becomes the soul of that individual body, and that body the body of this mind?—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

This atonement was the end of the incarnation: and the two articles reciprocate: for an incarnation is implied and presupposed in the Scripture doctrine of atonement, as the necessary means to the end.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 9.

Who seeks a friend should come disposed

T' exhibit in full bloom disclos'd

The graces and the beauties

That form the character he seeks,

For 'tis a union that bespeaks

Reciprocated duties.

Cowper. Friendship.

But any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude: nay, even if the thing be founded on a prior moral obligation, (as a promise to pay a just debt, though barred by the statute of limitations,) it is no longer nudum pactum.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 36.

RE-CITE, v.

RECITE, n.

RECITAL.

RECITATION.

RECITATIVE.

RECITER.

Fr. Citer, réciter; It. Recitare; Sp. Recetar; Lat. Recitare, (re, and citare, to call,)

to call upon again.

Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

Till that, as comes by course, I doe recite

What fortune to the Briton prince did lite,

Pursuing that proud knight, the which whileare

Wrought to Sir Calepine so foule despight.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

Plinie maketh a great recital of these.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 565.

But Hester, the historian, in his thirteenth of his histories of Attica, maketh a recital far contrary to other, saying, that some hold opinion, that Paris Alexander was slain in battle by Achilles and Patroclus in the country of Thessaly.

North. Plutarch, p. 14.

In Italy they have solemne declamations of certaine select young gentlemen in Florence, (like those reciters in old Rome,) and publike theatres in most of their cities, for stage-players and others to exercise and recreate themselves.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 270.

If menaces of Scripture fall upon men's persons, if they are but the recitations and descriptions of God's decreed wrath, and those decrees and that wrath have no respect to the actual sins of men; why should terrors restrain me from sin, when present advantage invites me to it?

Hammond.

The way has been to recite it at the prime, or first hour, (one o'clock in the Latin account, with us seven in the morning,) every Lord's day; and in some places every day.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 231.

From this time forwards, I presume, the Athanasian Creed has been honoured with a public recital, among the other sacred hymns and church offices, all over the west.

Id. Ib.

This, added to all former recites or observations, either of long-lived races or persons in any age or country, makes it easy to conclude, that health and long life are usually blessings of the poor, not of the rich, and the fruits of temperance, rather than of luxury and excess.—Sir W. Temple. Of Health.

Some men employ their health, an ugly trick,

In making known how oft they have been sick,

And give us, in recitals of disease,

A doctor's trouble, but without the fees.

Cowper. Conversation.

And though the most violent passions, the highest distresses, even death itself, are expressed in singing or recitative, I would not admit as sound criticism the condemnation of such exhibitions on account of their being unnatural.

Reynolds, Dis. 8.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

Thus whilst all things in troublous uproare were,
And all men busie to suppress the flame,
The loving couple neede no reskew feare,
But leasure had and liberty to frame
Their purpost flight, free from all men's reclame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

I shall willingly frame myself to all companies; not for a partnership in their vice, but for their reclamation from evil, or encouragement in good.

Bp. Hall. Satan's Fiery Darts quenched, Dec. 3. § 6.

Might you not better say plainly, that the Son is not eternal; not by nature, nor truly God, in a word, not God? No:
but Scripture reclaims, and the whole Catholic church re- claims; and Christian ears would not bear it.

Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 89.

He said that he was young, and so reclaimable: that this was his first fault.—Dr. Cockburn. Rem. on Burnet, p. 41.

In the year 325, as is well known, the Arian doctrines were proscribed and anathematized in the famous Council of Nice, consisting of 318 bishops, very unanimous in their resolutions, excepting a few reclaimants.

Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 89.

These, out of many such irregular practices, I write for his reclamation. But two or three things more before I conclude, to wit, that generally when his curate preaches on an afternoon, he sleeps sotting in the desk on a hassock.
Tatler, No. 71.

And look on Guise as a reclaimless rebel.

Lee. Duke of Guise.

A qualified property may subsist in animals feræ naturæ,

again.

Nor is this all: when two laminæ, which have been separated by accident or force, are brought together again, they immediately reclasp.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

RECLINE, v. } Fr. Récliner; It. Reclinare; RECLINE, adj. } Sp. Reclinar; Lat. Reclinare, to lean back, (Gr. κλιν-ειν, to lean.) See IN-CLINE.

To lean back; to lean, bend, or bow, back or against; to repose, to rest upon.

With how much joy does he, beneath some shade
By aged trees' reverend embraces made,
His careless head on the fresh green recline,
His head uncharg'd with fear or with design.
Cowley. Horace, Ep. 2.

— To thir supper fruits they fell,
Nectarine fruits which the compliant boughes Yielded them, side-long as they sat recline
On the soft downie bank damaskt with flowrs.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

being knowne, certeine recluses pursued him.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 297. an. 1255.

— Beyng therefore as a recluse in the groue, consecrated to Mars, she was delyuered of two sonnes.

Goldyng. Justine, fol. 177.

Divers of their greatest princes and ladies betake themselves to some convent or reclus'd house, to wean themselves from all worldly incumbrances, and converse only with heaven.—Howell, b. i. Let. 74.

Therefore I humbly beseech that your majesty would vouchsafe to conceive of me accordingly, and of one who by this recluse passive condition hath his share of this hideous storm.—Id. b. ii. Let. 63.

So reclus'd hermits oftentimes do know
More of heav'n's glory than a worldling can.

Donne. Eclogue, Dec. 1613.

Till Oswy made to God a most religious vow,
Of his abundant grace would he be pleas'd to grant
That he this Paynim prince in battle might supplant,
A recluse he would give his daughter and delight,
Sweet Alfid then in youth, and as the morning bright.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

A kind of calm recluseness is like rest to the over-labour'd man.—Feltham. Resolves, pt. ii. p. 379.

And if it sort not well, you may conceale her,
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some reclusive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, mindes, and iniuries.

Shakespeare. Much Adoe About Nothing, Act iv. sc. 1.

The interval which followed of above two years, he employed in the severest study: and this recluse period he ever after used to consider as the most active and serviceable of his whole life.—Goldsmith. Life of Lord Bolingbroke,

So when a husband with too curious eye,
Into his wife's recluser deeds would pry,
He quits content, his folly to deplore,
And never shall his peace recover more.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xliii.

RE-COAGULATION. Fr. Coaguler; Lat.
Co-agulare, from co-agere; to force or drive together, (sc.) into a lump or mass.

To rejoin into a mass; to join or unite again.

This salt we speak of, being prepared for the purpose, and dissolved in a convenient quantity of water, does upon its recoagulation so dispose of the aqueous particles among its own saline ones, that if the experiment be well and carefully made, almost the whole mixture will shoot together into fine crystals.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 423.

RE-COCT, v. Lat. Recoquere, recoctum.

To cook, to boil over again; to dress up again.

Old women and men too—seek, as it were, by Medea's charms, to recoct their corps, as she did Æson's, from feeble deformities to spritely handsomeness.

Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 71.

they were readie to affirme the sayd Duchie of Tuien to belong to the kinge of Englande.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 10.

And hereof came the names as well of all other gods, as of the stars and planets (which I have mentioned before) in recognisance of men's good deserts.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 12.

Having fortified myself privately with a short mental prayer, and with the sign of the cross, (not out of any superstition to the sign, but as a recognition of my baptism in Christ,) I grew a little bolder.

Cowley. On the Government of O. Cromwell.

The project was, that these stores should be deliver'd to Castel Blanco, that he should enter into a recognisance to carry them to Spain, and from thence to the West Indies.

Bolingbroke. Letter to Sir W. Windham.

Because God has appropriated all such addresses, so and so circumstantiated, to the one Lord Jehovah: thereby making them (if they were not in their own nature before) a virtual recognition of divine perfections.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 33.

1576

The king, the plaintiff, C. D. &c. is called the recognizee.
"is cui cognoscitur;" as he that enters into the recognisance is called the cognizor, "is qui cognoscit."

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

But the view in which the state regards the practice of morality is evidently seen in its recognition of that famous maxim, by which penal laws in all communities are fashioned and directed, that the severity of the punishment must always rise in proportion to the propensity to the crime.

Warburton. The Alliance, Post. to 4th Ed.

If, upon the general issue, the recognitors find an actual seisin in the demandant, and his subsequent disseisin by the present tenant, he shall have judgement to recover his seisin, and damages for the injury sustained.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 10.

RECOIL, v. } Anciently written Recule. Fr.
RECOIL, n. } Reculer, (reculement, adopted RECOILING, n. } by Fell;) It. Rinculare; Sp.
RECOLEMENT. } Recurar, (re, and Lat. Culus, Gr. Κολ-εος,?) to go back or backwards.

To go, to move back; to start, to shrink back;
to put, to push, to drive back; to retire, to return, to retreat, to repulse or repel.

With this from thence I was recoiled back,
With Iphytus, and Pelias alone.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Sodainely he blewe the retraite and recoiled almoste a myle backwarde.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 6.

Our men of arms, who were fresshe, came on agaynst thē, and caused thē to recule backe, and to fall in y^e dyke one vpon another.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 45.

But after y^e reporte of Peter Dysroye, whiche made a recule, or lytle boke of the wynnynge & losynge of Ierusalem, they, w^t moo Cristen prynses were dryuen by tēpest of the see.—Fabyan. Chron. pt. vii. c. 241.

A peece which shot so well, so gently, and so streight,
It neyther bruized with recule, nor wroong with ouer-weight.—Gascoigne. Weedes, p. 542.

— I wote that of youre toyle
And labors long, through which ye hether came,
Ye both forwearied be: therefore a whyle
I read you rest, and to your bowres recoyle.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

If a vine stand neare unto it, [the colewort,] a man shall sensibly perceive the same to shrinke away and recule backward from it.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 1.

The lawyer to his chamber doth recule,
For he hath now no bus'ness at the bar.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

— On a sudden op'n flie
With impetuous recoile and jarring sound
Th' infernal dores, and on their hinges grate Harsh thunder.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Those who having thoroughly discern'd each other's disposition, which oft-times cannot be till after matrimony, shall then find a powerful reluctance and recoil of nature on either side blasting all the content of their mutual society, that such persons are not lawfully married.

Id. Doctrine & Discipline of Divorce, b. i. c. 10.

The sharp pains of the stone were allay'd by that heaviness of sense which the recruitment of serous moisture into the habit of the body and insertions of the nerves occasion'd.

Hammond. The Life, by Fell.

They appear to "strain at a gnat while they can swallow a camel;" and use arguments against the Catholics which recoil more strongly upon themselves.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 87.

And, as long as these inward rejoits and recoilings of the mind continue, (which they will certainly do for a considerable part of a man's life,) the sinner will find his accounts of pleasure very poor and short.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

Collins. The Passions.

RE-COIN, v. } Fr. Coigner, from the Lat.
RECOINAGE. } Cuneus; sigillum ferreum, quo nummus cuditur.

To coin over again; to reform, or form or make anew, the coin or pieces of money; (met.) to forge or fashion, to invent again.

The mint gained upon the late statute, by the recoinage of groats and half groats, now twelpences and sixpences.

Bacon.

All came in the end to a wise and happy resolution, of recoining all the specie of England, in milled money.

Burnet. Own Time, vol. iii. b. vi.

'Tis only our clip'd money that wants amendment: And when that is recoin'd and reduced all to mill'd and lawful money that then too will have no need of raising.

Locke Value of Money.

This may be depended on, that if our money be raised as is proposed, it will inforce the recoining of all our money, both old and new.—Locke. Value of Money.

Among the Romans, to preserve great events upon their coins, when any particular piece of money grew very scarce, it was often recoined by a succeeding emperor.—Addison.

The value of the silver money which circulated in Scotland before the union in 1707, and which, immediately after it, was brought into the bank of Scotland, in order to be recoined, amounted to £411,117 10s. 9d. sterling.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

Before the late recoinage of the gold, the price of silver bullion was seldom higher than five shillings and sevenpence an ounce, which is but five-pence above the mint price.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 11.

RE-COLLE/CT, v. } It. Raccogliere; Sp. RECOLLE/CTION. } Racolegir; Lat. Re-colligere, (legere, Gr. Λεγ-ειν,) to gather again; to bring or put together again.

To collect or gather again; to bring or put again together; (met.) to gather, bring back, (sc. to the mind;) to recall, to resume; to restore.

Recollection,—see the quotations from Locke and Stewart.

As of this, all though many parts decay,
The pure, which elemented them, shall stay;
And though diffus'd, and spread in infinite Shall re-collect, and in one all unite.

Donne. To the Lady Bedford.

O! when to part, God doth the soule permit,
Rais'd from her shell, a pearly for Sion chus'd,
She recollects (accomplish'd ere she flit)
Her faculties amidst fraile flesh diffus'd.

Stirling. Domes-day. The First Hour.

That old and anticke song we heard last night;
Methought it did releese my passion much,
More then light ayres, and recollected termes
Of these most briske and giddy-paced times.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 4.

I shall only desire you here to remember the thing in general, and to be pleased to look upon that author, when you would recollect all the particulars and circumstances of the iniquity.—Cowley. On the Government of O. Cromwell.

Consider, I beseech you, Joh. v. 23. mentioned above; recollect with yourself, that he is sometimes distinctly and personally invoked.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 181.

Thus the perception, or thought, which actually accompanies, and is annexed to any impression on the body, made by an external object it frames a distinct idea of, which we call sensation; which is, as it were the actual entrance of any idea into the understanding by the senses. The same idea when it again recurs without the operation of the like object on the external sensory, is remembrance. If it be sought after by the mind, and with pain and endeavour found, and brought again in view, 'tis recollection.

Locke. On the Hum. Underst. b. xi. c. 19.

In other cases, the various particulars which compose our stock of knowledge are recalled in consequence of an effort of our will. This latter operation too is often called by the same name, (memory,) but is more properly distinguished by the word recollection.—Stewart. Human Mind, c. 6. s. 1.

RE-COMBINE, v. Bina jungere, to join or unite twos or pairs; generally, to unite.

To join or unite again; to rejoin.

Which when to-day the priest shall recombine,
From the mysterious, holy touch, such charms
Will flow.—Carew. On the Marriage of T. K. & C. C.

RE-COMFORT, v. } Fr. Conforter, récon- RECOMFORTLESS. } forter, to strengthen or make strong (fortis).

To strengthen, to invigorate, to refresh, to cheer, or console—again.

And gan her arme right over his shoulder lay,
And him with all her wit to recomfort.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

—He shall be releesed of his peine,
Through recomfort of some high marriage.

Lidgate. The History of Thebes, pt. ii.

Then Joue with freendly words his sonne recomforts thus
again:

Ech man's day stands prefixt.

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. x.

With whose courage, the Lacedemones highly recomforted, delyuered vnto hym x. thousande souldiours, with the whiche hoste he went into Asia, and there vanquished the Persians.—Sir T. Eloyt. The Governour, b. iii. c. 14.

Thus, long this gentle bird to him did use
Withouten dread of perill to repaire
Unto his wonne, and with her mournfull muse
Him to recomfort in his greatest care.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

VOL. II

There all that night remained Britomart, Restlesse, recomfortlesse, with heart deepe-grieved,
Not suffering the least twinkling sleepe to start
Into her eye.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

RE-COMMENCE, v. Fr. Recommencer, to recommence, iterate, renew, begin afresh, (Cotgrave.) It. Ricominciare; Sp. Recomenzar.

I use not to rush rashly into prayer without a trembling precedent meditation; and if any odd thoughts intervene and grow upon me, I check myself and recommence: and this is incident to long prayers, which are more subject to man's weakness, and the devil's malice.

Howell. Letters, b. i. s. 6.

We told him that we purposed recommencing our voyage about the 5th of June.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 6.

RE-COMME/ND, v. } Fr. Recommender; RECOMME/NDABLE. } (re, and commander;) RECOMME/NDABLENESS. } It. Raccomandare; RECOMMENDA/TION. } Sp. Recomendar; Lat. RECOMME/NDATORY. } Commendare, to give RECOMME/NDER. } into the hands (manus)

of another; to the management or care, to the trust or confidence.

To give or commit to the trust of another; and, consequently, to declare trustworthy, worthy of approbation, esteem, favour.

Custance, your child hire recommendeth oft Unto your grace; for I shal to Surrie, Ne shal I never seen you more with eye.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4699.

Sir, ye shall go lyke yourselfe to Bristowe to the kyng, and there shewe hym what case the busynesse of his realme is in, and recommaunde vs to hym.

Whome I founde a lorde of hyghe recomendacyon, noble, lyberall, and curtesse.—Id. Ib. c. 27.

I leave hir vnder thy recomendacion.—Golden Boke, c. 47.

Nonius Asprenas, one of his greatest friends, was accused by Cassius Severus to have poisoned an hundred and thirty bidden guests at a banquet. Augustus did not recommende him, but let the senators alone, who banished Cassius.

North. Plutarch, p. 974.

Though these pursuits should make out no pretence to advantage, yet, upon the account of honour, they are recommendable.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, Pref.

The last rule to try opinions by, is the recommendableness of our religion to strangers, or those that are without.

More. Mysteries of Godliness, b. x. c. 3.

However some may have despised the burying of the dead, yet it hath always been had in an extraordinary recommenda-tion amongst the ancient.—North. Plutarch, pt. ii.

Neither was there in that packet (of which I wrote your honour before) any such recommendatory letter.

Reliquiæ Woltonianæ, p. 700.

Blan. This letter is in your behalf, fair maid,
There's no denying such a recommender.

Digby. Eteira, Act i. sc. 1.

The conduciveness of every man's uprightness to the public good, is not the only consideration upon which it is recommendable as a means for obtaining safety and security in evil times.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 5.

The utmost excess that any course of life was capable of they presently apply to those who had no other design in all their actions than to recommende true piety and goodness to them.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Sure I am St. Paul is of this mind, for as he was a most zealous intercessor himself for others, and a most zealous recommender of that practice to all those that he wrote to, so he also sufficiently declares how much he himself stood in need of other people's prayers.

Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

The very interests of our desires sometimes require self-denial, which is recommendable only on that account.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 27.

RE-COMMIT, v. It. Recommittere; Lat. Com-mittere, simul mittere, aut conjungere.

To send back again; to consign again to.

When they [the Lords] had bailed the twelve bishops, who were in the Tower for the treason of their protestation, which they did the next day after the bill was passed for taking away their votes, the House of Commons in great indignation expostulated with them and caused them immediately again to be recommitted to the Tower.

Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. i. p. 435.

RE-COMPA/CT, v. Lat. Compactum, past part. of compingere, to fix together.

To fix or fasten; join or unite again.

Till my return, repair
And recompact my scatter'd body so,
As all the virtuous powers which are Fix'd in the stars, are said to flow.

Donne. A Valediction of my Name.

1577

RE-COMPENSE, v. } Fr. Compenser, récom- RE/COMPENSE, n. } penser; It. Ricompen- RE/COMPENSEMENT. } sàre; Sp. Recompensar; RE/COMPENSER. } Lat. Re, and compen- RECOMPENSA/TION. } sare, to weigh together, to balance.

To give or return an equivalent; to reward, to remunerate; to repay or pay for; to requite.

Thus sith I haue consumed and mispent
Not only my days, but my five-fold talent,
That my Lord committed me, I can't recompence,
I may not too derely abie my negligence.

Chaucer. Remedie of Loue.

And eke the shrewes hem self, if it were lefull to hem, to seen at any clifte, the vertue that thei haue forletten, and sawen that thei should putten adoune the filthes of hir vices, by the tourmentes of paines, thei ne oughten not, right of that recompensacion, [compensatione,] for to getten hem bountie and prowess, &c.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

Hir list neuer yeue ageyne
A goodly worde in suche a wise
Wherof myn hope might arise,
My great loue to recompence.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

But this great loss of Varro is a little recompensed by the happy coming of Dionysius Halicarnassæus to Rome in Augustus' dayes.—Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

In recompensation wherof, the mayre and burgeyses of that towne presented the kyng with vii. stegys [stedis] trappyd in cloth of sylke and other presendes.

Id. vol. ii. an. 1273.

Yet will it scarsellie be, or not at all, that thou shalt appeare a thankfull recompenser of the benefits received at his hand.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 194. an. 1166.

His lovely words her seem'd due recompence
Of all her passed paines; one loving howre
For many yeares of sorrow can dispence;
A dram of sweete is worth a pound of soure.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

And therein sat an old man, halfe blind,
And all decrepit in his feeble corse,
Yet lively vigour rested in his mind,
And recompens them with a better score;
Weake body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompence as friends the good misled,
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Marius an end of exile only sought,
Sylla to crush a hated faction fought;
A larger recompence these leaders claim,
And higher is their vast ambition's aim.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. i.

RE-COMPI/LEMENT, } Lat. Compilare; RECOMPI/LING, n. } Gr. Πιλουν, to stow thick or close; to put close together.

To put together again; to compose or arrange again.

Although I had a purpose to make a particular digest or recompilment of the laws, I laid it aside.

Bacon. Touching the Compiling & Amend. of the Lawes.

After I had thought of many things, I could find, in my judgement, none more proper for your Majesty as a master, nor for me as a workman, than the reducing and recompiling of the laws of England.—Id. Ib.

RE-COMPO/SE, v. } Fr. Composer, re-com- RECOMPO/SER. } poser; It. Ricomporre;

Lat. Componere, to put, place, or set together.

To put again together; to mix or mingle again; to coalesce, unite again; to quiet or calm again.

Finding by art his natural forces broke,
And Thames, bearing captive-like, the arched yoke,
Does roar, and foam, and rage, at the disgrace,
But re-composes straight, and calms his face.

Cowley. On repairing Somerset House.

No animal figure can offer to move or wagge amisse, but it meets with a proper corrector and re-composer of its motions.—More. The Moral Cabbala, c. 1.

Frequently by casting those beams, that in one of the irises made the blue upon the red parts of the other iris, we were able to produce a lovely purple, which we can destroy or recompose at pleasure, by severing and re-approaching the edges of the two irises.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 738.

RE-CONCILE, v. } Fr. Concilier, réconcilier; It. Riconciliare; Sp. Reconciliar; Lat. Reconciliare, (re, and conciliare, in concilium, unum concilium convocare,) to bring back again to unanimity or concord; to restore to agreement.

To call or bring back to, to recall, to restore, to regain, to renew—unanimity, concord, agreement, favour or good will; to pacify, to atone; to cause to agree, or coincide, or correspond, or be consistent; to gain or win a favourable opinion; and, consequentially, to overcome or subdue a dislike.

Leave there thi gifte bfore the auter, and go first to be reconciled to thi brothir, and thanne thou schalt come and schalt offre thi gifte.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

Leaue there thine offering before the aultare, and goe thy waye fyrste and be reconcyled to thy brother, and then come and offre thy gyfte.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And not onli this but also we glorien in God bi oure Lord Iesu Crist, bi whom we han resseyued now reconcelyng.—Wiclif. Romayne, c. 5.

And Caton sayth, "Avisse thee wel, and eschue wordes of swetenesse and of plesaunce," and eke thou shalt eschue the conselling of thin olde enemies that ben reconciled.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And if I had sayde, that ye shulde han purchased the pees and the reconciliation, I ne hadde not muchel mistake me, ne sayde amiss.—Id. Ib.

The synne, whiche that Adam wrought,
Whan he sigh tyme ayene he bought,
And send his sonne fro the heuen,
Whiche man's sowe hath set in euen,
And hath his grace reconciled,
Fro whiche the man was first exiled.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Wherefore by fayre and easy meanes he called home his sone and reconciled hym, and forgaue all trespase.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 127.

Wherefore this woman, beyng reedlesse [remedylesse] calling to mynde ye great loue yt was atwene hir husbonde and Cadwan, she sent vnto hym, and specially besought hym to reconcyle hyr lorde and husbonde that she might be restoryd to his companye.—Id. Chronycles, pt. v. c. 128.

He had more cause to rejoice, seeing he had brought the cite in that order and in such peace, that there needed no reconcilement amongst them.—Fox. Mart. p. 108. an. 610.

Christ, our onlie and sufficient mediatour, reconciler, priest and sacrifice, hath pleased the father, and quieted and pacified his wrathe against our sinnes.—Id. Ib. p. 1355. an. 1555.

And his trew love, faire Psyche, with him playes;
Fayre Psyche, to him lately reconcylid,
After long troubles and unmeet upbrayes.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

But howsoever these things might be reconcilable, I think clearly that Cadwallader in the British, and Cedwalla, king of West Saxons, in Bede, Malmesbury, Florence, Huntingdon, and other stories of the English, are not the same.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9. Selden. Illustrations.

Thirdly, that this [cylinder] cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice, or the reasonableness of charging on men's wills, what was inevitably produced by their fate, or of punishing them for those acts which they are necessarily driven to commit.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 491.

What hope have you that ever Bolinbroke
Will live a subject, that hath try'd his fate?
Or what good reconcilement can you look,
Where he must always fear, and you must hate?
—Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

Yet, so much I think may be granted to those reconcilers, (Porphyry, Simplicius, and others) that the main essentials of their two philosophies are the same.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 53.

Nicias straight perceiving the Spartans had long desired peace, and that the Athenians were no more so hotly given to wars, but that both the one and the other had their hands full, and were willing to be quiet, devised what means he might use to bring Sparta and Athens to reconciliation again.—North. Plutarch, p. 454.

Those reconciliatory papers fell under the eyes of some grave divines on both parts; Mr. Montague professed that he had seen them, and would subscribe to them very willingly.—Bp. Hall. Specialties of the Life of Bp. Hall.

Nothing can be less reconcilable to the notion of an all perfect Being, than the imagination that he undoes by his power in particular cases what his wisdom, to whom nothing is future, once thought sufficient to be established for all cases.—Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays.

If we are certain that we have done any man an injury in his person, estate, or good name, or that we have given just cause of offence, it is our duty and business to make reparation, and to sue first for reconcilement.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 403.

I am unwilling to be tedious, and incline to think that the very meanest readers may now fully apprehend what a grimace and banter our Arian reconcilers make of their solemn subscription.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 361.

The reconciler bowl went round the board,
Which emptied, the rude skinker still restor'd.—Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Who [Grotius] although he saw these two things (a real Job and a dramatic representation of him) so reconcilable, that he supposeth both, yet will not allow the book of Job to be later than Ezekiel, because that mentions Job.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 2.

From this natural and reasonable diffidence arose, in humble and timorous piety, a disposition to confound penance with repentance, to repose on human determinations, and to receive from some judicial sentence the stated and regular assignment of reconciliatory pain.—Rambler, No. 110.

RE-CONDE'NSE, v. Lat. Con-densare, (con, and densus,) thick.

To bring back to its former density or thickness.

In the heads of stills, and necks of colipiles, such vapours quickly are, by a very little cold, recondensed into water.—Boyle.

RE-CONDITE. Fr. Récondit; It. Recondito; Sp. Recondito; Lat. Reconditum, past part. of recondere, to hide from, (re, and condere, to hide. See ABSCOND.)

Hidden, concealed; consequentially, found with difficulty, difficult to be discovered, abstruse, profound.

But here (according to the more recondit and arcane doctrine of the pagans) these three Capitoline Gods, Jupiter, Minerva, and Juno, as well as some others, may be understood to have been nothing else but several names and notions of one supreme Deity, according to it several attributes and manifestations.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 450.

Which key is able to unlock that recondite mystery of some particular men's almost fatal averseness from all religion and virtue.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 12.

To qualify the Christian to make a judicious application of these rules no skill is requisite in verbal criticism—no proficiency in the subtleties of the logician's art—no acquisitions of recondite learning.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

RE-CONDUCT, v. Fr. Reconduire; It. Ricondurre; Lat. Conducere, to lead together; to guide.

To lead, to guide—back again; to accompany back as guide or leader.

Forbode not here calamities to come;
Your female train will reconduct you home.—Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. i.

RE-CONFIRM, v. Lat. Confirmare, to make firm or stable.

To re-establish, to establish, strengthen, assure again.

And so being reconfirmed, upon the thirtieth of August in the year 1667, he sent secretary Morrice, &c.—Clarendon. Life, vol. iii. p. 835.

RE-CONJOIN, v. Lat. Conjungere, to join or put, place or bring together.

To unite together again.

There are some liquors which, though colourless of themselves, when they come to be elevated and dispersed into exhalations, exhibit a conspicuous colour, which they lose again when they come to be reconjoined into a liquor.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 739.

RE-CONNING. See the quotation.

This we call Remembrance or calling to mind; the Latins call it reminiscentia, as it were a Re-conning of our former actions.—Hobbs. Of Man, c. 3.

RE-CONNOITRE, v. Fr. Reconnoistre, to recognise, (qv.)

To take notice of; "to take a precise view of, to look specially or diligently at," (Cotgrave.)

The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles that Edward the Third reconnoitred the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them.—Addison.

Not the gross act alone employs her pen,
She reconnoitres Fancy's airy band.—Young. Complaint, Night 2.

From some place of security he took a view of the dragon, or as a modern soldier would say, reconnoitred him, and observed that his belly was naked and vulnerable.—Johnson. Idler, No. 8.

The price, indeed, was very small, and instead of thirty years' purchase, the ordinary price of land in the present times, it amounted to little more than the expense of the different equipments which made the first discovery, reconnoitred the coast, and took a fictitious possession of the country.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

RE-CONQUER, v. } Fr. Re-conquérir, to RECONQUEST. } resubdue, re-conquer, (Cotgrave.) Formerly Conquiere: Lat. Conquiere, to get or gain.

To get or gain again; to overcome or vanquish again.

Advertising them, that there was in those partes no puissance or garrison of Frenche men, to withstande them, and therefore there was no doubt of the regaynyng or reconquest.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 30.

Bell. Look on those grave plodding fellows, that pass by us, as though they were meditating the re-conquest of Flanders.—Dryden. The Mock Astrologer, Act i. sc. 1.

RE-CONSECRATE, v. Lat. Consecrare, (con, and sacrare, sacrum facere,) to make or cause to be holy or sacred.

To hallow again; to devote or dedicate again, (sc. to sacred purposes.)

If a church should be consumed by fire, it shall, in such a case, be reconsecrated.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

RE-CONSIDER, v. Fr. Re-considérer; Lat. Considerare, (a contemplatione siderum.)

To view again, to review, to look into again, to reflect again upon.

And I have therefore the more reason to expect a distinct answer from you, whenever you think proper to reconsider this subject.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 117.

But reconsider, since the wisest err,
Vengeance resolved, 'tis dangerous to defer.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

After it has gone through the committee, the chairman reports it to the house with such amendments as the committee have made, and then the house reconsiders the whole bill, and the question is repeatedly put upon every clause and amendment.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

RE-CONSOLATE, v. Fr. Consoler, reconsoler; Lat. Consolari, to cheer the solitary.

To comfort, cheer, solace again.

It is that only God who can reconsolate us both: who when he hath called now one, and then another of his own creatures unto himself, will unclasp the final book of his decrees, and dissolve the whole.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 439.

RE-CONSTRUCT, v. } Fr. Reconstruire.
RECONSTRUCTION. } To build again or rebuild; to put or place, fix or fasten firmly, strongly together again.

The whole fabric was so disfigured with the additions of injudicious or ill-designing workmen, that it seemed no blameable attempt to reconstruct the whole afresh from the very ground.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 31.

A fleet of above thirty vessels, all carrying cannon, was in about three months little less than created, though a few of the largest were reconstructions, having been first framed and sent over from Great Britain.—Belsham. Hist. of Great Britain. Geo. III. an. 1777.

RE-CONTINUE, v. } Lat. Continuare, (con-RECONTINUANCE. } tinuum est, quod communi termino continetur,) to keep or hold together; (sc.) without stop or break.

To hold together, to remain again, as before; to last or endure again.

All at an instant shall together go,
To recontinue, not beginning so.—Stirling. Domes-day. The Fourth Hour.

Of which course some have wished a recontinuance, that either amendment of opinion, or change of purpose in publishing might prevent blazoned errors.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

RE-CONVE/NE v. } Fr. Re-convener; Lat. RECONVENT. } Con-venire, to come together.

To come or cause to come together again; to re-assemble or assemble together again.

He reconvening armes therefore,
And taken pris'ner so,
Died to his countrie's friends a friend,
And to her foes a foe.

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 27.

A worse accident fell out about the time of the two houses reconvening, which made a wonderful impression.
Clarendon.

RE-CONVERT, v. } Fr. Re-converter; Lat. RECONVERSION. } Convertere, to turn together; from one thing to another; one way of thinking to another.

To turn or change again, to a former opinion or way of thinking or believing.

About this time the East Saxons, who, as above hath been said, had expell'd their Bishop Mellitus, and renounc'd the Faith, were by the means of Oswi thus reconverted.

Milton. History of England, b. iv.

Pope Gregory the First, being zealously moved for the reconversion of the English nation, sent hither Austin the Monke with other his associates.—Weever.

RE-CONVE/Y. Fr. Re-conveyer; Lat. Con-vehere, to carry together.

To carry or bear back again.

As rivers lost in seas, some secret vein
Thence reconveys, there to be lost again.

Denham. Cooper's Hill.

RECORD, v. } Fr. Recorder; Sp. Recordar; RECORD, n. } Lat. Recordari; rursus in cor
RECORDATION. } revocare, (Varro, lib. v.) Cum RECORDER. } affectu cordis reminisci, (Vossius.) To recall to the heart; to remind or bring to mind with some affection of the heart; and so far, (Vossius adds,) more than to remind.

To remind, recall, bear, bring to, or lay before, the mind; to keep or retain in mind or memory; to keep, retain, or preserve the memory; to register, to commemorate; also, to rehearse, to repeat; to repeat or rehearse a tune or song, to tune or attune.

For the musical instrument called a recorder, see the quotation from Bacon, and Holland's Pliny.

Fayne were (thei) to folwen hem. and faste ryden after
To take red at reson. that recorde sholde Byfore the kyng and conscience.—Piers Plouhman, p. 65.

Your owen mouth, by your confession
Hath damned you, and I wol it recorde.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1747.

A lord is lost, if he be vicious;
And drvnkenesse is eke a foule record
Of any man, and namely of a lord.

Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7632.

Ne lasse flattering in her worde,
That purely her simple recorde,
Was found as trewe as any bond,
Or trouth of any man's hond.

Id. Dreame.

But so as euery boke recordeth,
It is to kynde no plesance,
That men about his sustenance,
Unto the golde shall serue, and bowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For suche as be in sorowe, care or payne, can not sleape soundely, for the often recordacion of theyr euils.

Udal. Floures, fol. 138.

Then was declared to the by Master Brooke ye recorder how that the kynges counsaill had reported to the y^t the cominalitie that night would ryse.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 8.

And this note, madam, of your worthiness
Remains recorded in so many hearts,
As time nor malice cannot wrong your right,
In th' inheritance of fame you must possess.

Daniel. To the Lady Margaret.

They long'd to see the day, to heare the lark
Record her hymns and chant her carols blest.

Fairfax. Tasso, b. ii. s. 97.

Then, reverend priest, who God's recorder art,
Do from his dictates to these two impart
All blessings which are seen, or thought, by angel's eye or heart.

Donne. Eclogue, Dec. 1612.

Unless also these fair and sacred recordations we call and refer unto divine, true and celestiall beauty, according to the Platoniques, by the meanes of which rememorations as with wings, the soul is mounted and carried up.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 940.

The figure of recorders, and flutes, and pipes are straight; but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater, above and below.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 221.

The flute and the single pipe or recorder were the inventions of Pan, the son of Mercurie.

Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

They (curious oft of mortals' actions) deign,
In forms like these, to round the earth and main,
Just and unjust recording in their mind,
And with sure eyes inspecting all mankind.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

—That black hour,
(May memory ever raise it from her records,) When all my squadrons fled, and left their king Old and defenceless.

Mason. Caractacus.

The judgment itself, and all the proceedings previous thereto, are carefully registered and preserved, under the name of records, in public repositories set apart for that particular purpose.—Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd.

The next stage in the notes of a bird is termed by the bird-catchers recording, which word is probably derived from a musical instrument, formerly used in England, called a recorder. This attempt in the nestling to sing may be compared to the imperfect endeavour in a child to babble.

Barrington. On the Singing of Birds.

RE-CORPORIFICATION, v. An embodying again; or a bringing again to a bodily state.

This factitious vitriol may not be barely a new production, but partly a re-corporification, as they speak, of the vitriolate corpuscles contained in the menstruum.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 53.

RE-COUCH, v. Fr. Coucher, to lie down.
To lie down again; to repose again or retire again to their bed or couch.

Thou mak'st the night to over-vail the day;
Then savage beasts creep from the silent wood,
Then lions' whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food;
Who when at morn they all recouch again,
Then toying man till eve pursues his pain.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 386.

RE-COVER, v. } Fr. Recouvrer, recouvrir; RECOVERABLE. } It. Ricoverare; both (says RECOVERANCE. } Skinner) from the Lat.
RECOVERY, n. } Recuperare, to take back RECOVERING, n. } again. (Re-cuperare, reciperare, recipere,—Vossius.) Menage derives recouvrer from recuperare, and recouvrir from re-co-operire, to cover again. The Sp. has recuperar and recobrar, but a distinction does not seem to be preserved.

To get back again, to obtain possession of again; to repossess, to resume; to cover, heal, or make whole again; to restore or return to, to regain, health or soundness.

A prophesie sais he salle die, and whan he is ouere,
After that day Scotland may haf god recouere.

R. Gloucester, p. 282.

And some to ryde and reckevere, that unryghtfulliche was wonne.—Piers Plouhman, p. 378.

For there is neither huske nor hay
In Mey, that it nill shrouded bene,
And it with leues newe wrene:
These woodes eke recoueren grene,
That drie in winter ben to sene.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And I shall truly, withall my full might
Your bitter tournen all to sweetnesse,
If I be she that may doe you gladnesse,
For every wo ye shall recover a blisse.

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

And therefore now I praie to enforme me in this, or els I hold me without recouerie.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. ii.

But well is hym, that God woll helpe—
For he stant on the siker side, Whiche elles shulde go beside,
I see my felawe well recouer,
And I mote dwell still pouer.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And thus my sonne I wolde sayne,
As I said er, that thou arise
Er that thou fall in suche a wise,
That thou ne might thy selfe recouer.—Id. Id. b. viii.

And when he woke, he said: a wife,
My loye, my lust, and my desyre,
My welth, and my recouerie,
Why shall I live, and thou shalt die?—Id. Id.

I haue lost my land and realme, and am not like to recouer them againe.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 67.

And God haue mercy of Sir Bertram of Clesquyes soule, for he was a true knyght, by whome in his tyme we had many recoueraunces and good iourneys.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 33.

The duke Henry of Lancastre sayd, and other lordes of Englande, that yf he were out of pryson, by hym might be made many grete recoueraunces for the royaleme of Fraunce, for kyng Phylip, as then Frensshe kyng, was his vncler.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 71.

But Laurence, what became of the kyng of Castele after this discomfyture, made he ony recovery, or dyd he close hymselfe in any of his townes?—Id. Id. c. 45.

For sometimes Paridell and Blandamour
The better had, and bet the others backe;
Eftsoones the others did the field recoure,
And on their foes did worke full cruell wracke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt shorter with him:
You must consider, that a prodigal course
Is like the sunnes, but not like his recouerable, I feare.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iii. sc. 4.

The Lord hath sent me to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blinde.—Luke, viii. 18.

And thereupon doth Lancaster proceed
To make his claim unto the monarchy;
And shows the right he hath, both by descent
And by recou'ry, to the government.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

His [Beryllus] mistake had shown some weakness of judgment, but his recovery manifested great strength of mind, and a good command over himself and his passions.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 233.

Though wicked men be under the influence of their corrupt, prevailling inclinations in the ordinary course of their lives; yet at some certain seasons, and especially in the absence of temptations, their enchanted reason and understanding may recover its due force and spring.

Id. Id. vol. ix. p. 69.

[This is] the only case in which damages were recoverable in any possessory action at the common law.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 10.

This is that fulness of the Gentiles of which St. Paul speaks, as coincident in time with the recovery of the Jews, and in a great degree the effect of their conversion.

Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

RE-COUNT, v. } Fr. Recompter, racompter, RECOUNTING, n. } raconter; It. Ricontare; RECOUNTMENT. } Sp. Recontar; Lat. Computare, (con, and put-are,) to compute, to calculate.

To compute or calculate again; to reckon, to number, again; to tell over again, (numerically or otherwise;) to relate, to repeat, to narrate.

Recount thy race now ronne, how few shalt thou there see,
Of whom to say, This same is he that never failed mee?

Vncertaine Auctors. Of Friendship.

And the happie people recounted the great clemencie and mercie, that was in the emperour, and his vertue and worthynesse in gouernynge.—Golden Boke, c. 33.

But my recountyng is

Of them that do amiss.—Skelton. The Boke of Colin Clout.

More ample spirit than hetherto was wount
Heere needes me, whiles the famous auncestries
Of my most dreaded soveraigne I recount,
By which all earthly-princes she doth far surmount.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

With ye which answers Grene returned, recomptyng the same to kyng Richard at Warwyke yet on his iourney.

Hall. Rich. III. an. 1.

Oh. By and by.

When from the first to last, betwixt vs two,
Teares our recountments had most kindly bath'd.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 3.

Thus far I have proceeded in recounting, explaining, and vindicating the several divine titles ascribed to God the Son in Holy Scripture.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 140.

For him full oft the heav'nly Muses led,
To clear Euphrates, and the secret mount,
To Araby and Eden, fragrant climes;
All which the sacred bard would oft recount.

Mason. Museus.

RE/CREANDISE. } stories of battle, an infidel or heathen, from re, negative, and credo. See MISCREANT, (Skinner.) The Low Lat. Recredere was of common use in legal proceedings. When slaves, upon trial of their claim to freedom, were found to have no just claim, they were said redere et recredere se—to their masters; hence those were said recredere se who acknowledged themselves defeated or conquered; and these were, consequently, degraded, disgraced; condemned to infamy. See Recredere, et seq. in Du Cange.

One who is defeated or conquered, who flies from battle; a coward, a dastard; a renegade.

So wis he was in dede, of body so valiant,
With dynt of suerd & drede he mad thaim recreant.
R. Brunne, p. 9.

Sothly, he that despeireth him is like to the coward champion recreant, that flieth withouten nede.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

So that I might to him my herte breake.
I shuld anone deuoid al my greuance,
For he is the blisse of very recreaunce.
Id. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

It sitteth thee nought curteis to bee,
To do men pleasaunce or seruise,
In thee it is recreaundise.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Yet, to shewe courage and desyre to goo another season into Englande, and that it sholde not be sayd that the Frensshmen were recreaunt to have made that voyage.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 81.

Lo! recreant, sayd he, the fruitlesse end
Of thy vaine boast, and spoile of love misgotten,
Whereby the name of knighthood thou dost shend,
And all true lovers with dishonour blotten.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Now with main blows their armours are unbrac'd,
And as the French before the English fled,
With their brown bills their recreant backs they baste,
And from their shoulders their faint arms do shred.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

And then the knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall with his friends to victory advance,
And grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

But hear me, wretch! if recreant in the fray,
That huge bulk yield this ill-contested day;
Instant thou sail'st, to Echetus resign'd,
A tyrant, fiercest of the tyrant kind.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

If the appellant becomes recreant, and pronounces the horrible word craven, he shall lose his liberam legem, and become infamous.—Blackstone Commentaries, b. iv. c. 27.

RE-CREATE, v. } Fr. Recréer; It. Ricre-
RECREATION. } are; Sp. Recrear; Lat.
RE'CREATIVE. } Re-creare: to create or give being or life again; to revive.

To revive or give fresh life or spirit to, to reanimate, to refresh; to restore spirit or vivacity, liveliness or cheerfulness; to enliven, to cheer.

My comfort and all my recreation,
Farewell my perpetuall salutioun.
Chaucer. Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

In tyme of recreacion,
Nature hath in creacion,
The stomake for a comune koke
Ordeined so, as saith the boke.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The man did mourne, and was half dead, because the Lords death was at hande; but the Lord did comfort and recreate him.—Udal. John, c. 13.

After supper, [Ridley] recreating himselfe in playing at chestes the space of an houre, he would then returne againe at his study.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1559. an. 1555.

The moste noble and valiaunt princis of Grece often tymes, to recrete theyr spirites, and in augmentinge their courage, embraced instruments musicall.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 7.

So that of necessity they must either apply their accustomed labours, or else recreate themselves with honest and laudable pastimes.—More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 6.

And here when this auctor taketh his recreatio to speake of the fainyng of the papistes, I shal ioyn this issue in this place that he vnderstandeth not what he sayth.
Bp. Gardner. Explic. of the True Catholick Fayth, fol. 40.

Father of heav'n, and him by whom
It, and us for it, and all else for us,
Thou mad'st and govern'st ever, come,
And re-create me, now grown ruinous.—Donne. Litany.

If honest recreation onely; what neede of any stage-plays for this purpose, since there is so great varietie of farre honeste, cheaper, pleasanter, shorter, and more obvious recreations.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act ii.

After which sleight and onely recreative touch, hee [Homer] betooke him seriously to the honor of the Gods;
in hymns resounding all their peculiar titles, jurisdiction, and dignities.—Chapman. Hymnes of Homer, Pref.

Rural recreations abroad, and books at home, are the innocent pleasures of a man who is early wise, and gives fortune no more hold on him than of necessity he must.
Dryden. Virgil. Ecl. Ded.

Such easy and recreative experiments require but little time, or charge, or trouble in the making, and when made are sensible and surprising enough.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 664.

Variety can never be the groundwork and principle of the performance: it must only be employed to recreate and relieve.—Reynolds, Dis. 8.

Every man's own conscience must direct him what portion of this leisure should be allotted to his private devotions and what may be spent in sober recreation.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

RE'CREMENT. } See EXCREMENT. Lat.
RECREMENT'IOUS. } Recrementum; re, and cern-ere; Gr. Κρῖν-ειν, to separate.

That which separates, or is separated, (sc.) from other substances, purer substances; the dross;
the lees.

Of all the visible creatures that God hath made, none is so pure and simple as light: it discovers all the foulness of the most earthly recrements, it mixeth with none of them.
Bp. Hall. Rem. p. 41.

There are in most mercuries either recrementitious particles, or at least some loose adherencies, that are separable from the rest of the body.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 645.

As if that disposition to be calcined (as the chemists are pleased to speak) or turned into powder required the presence of the recrementitious or more separable part of quick-silver, that a chymist would perhaps call it sulphur.
Id. Ib. p. 649.

RE-CRIMINATE, v. } Fr. Récriminer; to RECRIMINATION. } recriminer, retort a RECRIMINATORY. } crime, accuse an accuser; Sp. Recriminar; Lat. Crimen; an act contrary to law, human or divine.

To charge again, or recharge a crime; to re-accuse, to retort an accusation.

But now it will be objected that I patronize the vice by the authority of former poets, and extenuate my own faults by recrimination.—Dryden. Pref. to the Mock Astrologer.

Lorenzo, to recriminate is just.
Young. Complaint, Night 5.

When we laid aside the Billingsgate, and the long recri- minations by which, if he could not defend Moses, he tried to revenge himself on Plato, we found little or nothing in it that deserves attention.
Bolingbroke. On one of Archbp. Tillotson's Sermons.

They seem to have been so entirely occupied with the defence of the French directory, so very eager in finding recriminatory precedents to justify every act of its intolerable insolence, that every thing concerning the sacrifice in this business of national honour, and of the most fundamental principles in the policy of negotiation, seemed wholly to have escaped them.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

RE-CRUDENCY. Fr. Recrudir; Lat. Re- crudescere, (crudus, raw,) to become raw again.

A state of rawness or soreness; or of becoming raw or sore.

For if the wound be not ripped up again, and come to a recrudency by new foreign succours, I think that no physician will go on much with letting of blood, in declinatione morbi; but will intend to purge and corroborate.
Bacon. To Sec. Cecil, an. 1601.

RECRUIT, v. } Fr. Re-croistre, recroître, RECRUIT, n. } to re-increase; Lat. Re-cres- RECRUITER. } cere,—to grow again; (re, and crescere.) See CRESCENT.

To grow again; to add again to the number or quantity; to supply a loss or deficiency.

Recruits,—men enlisted to increase the number left to or towards the original number.

His [Amurath] forces, though daily recruited by the new supplies which came to him, yet mouldred away.
North. Lives, pt. ii. p. 60. (Castriot.)

Their legall power to raise an army for the kingdom's defence would be fruitlesse, if they might not levy moneyes to recrute and maintain their army when raised.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iv. p. 33.

The oftner the change is, the more advantageous it is for the city, because commonly it brings strangers, and a recruit of new people.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 38.

Upon the leaving of the House of Commons by divers members, purposely to adhere to his Majesty, he [Prynne] was elected a recruiter for Newport, in Cornwall, to serve in that most unhappy Parliament.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. p. 437.

We toil till we are weary, and have exhausted our strength and spirits, and then we think to refresh and recruit ourselves: but, alas! that refreshment is only to prepare and enable us for the bearing the next hour's burthen.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 15.

Yearly thy herds in vigour will impair;
Recruit and mend them with thy yearly care.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

So all those false alarms of strife,
Between the husband and the wife,
And little quarrels often prove,
To be but new recruits of love.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

If my memory does not deceive, the French were forced very early to send recruits to their armies, as they send slaves to their galleys.
Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 8.

RECTANGULAR. } Having right angles.
RECTANGULARLY. }

Nor doth every one, who hath an idea of a rectangular triangle, presently understand that the square of the sub-tense is equal to the squares of both the sides.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 653.

For at the equator thereof the needle will stand rectan- gularly; but approaching northward toward the tropick it will regard the stone obliquely, and when it attaineth the pole, directly.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

Rectitude or uprightness,—conformity to human and divine laws.

Rector, (generally,)—a ruler or governor. In Ecclesiastical Law, rector is synonymous with parson.

Thus ys Mede amerede, as two manere relations
Rect and indirect. Piers Plouhman, p. 55.

Leat them, therefore, put away yearthly affections and rectifie their mindes, applying the same to spirituall and heavenly thynges.—Udal. John, c. 20.

The auctoritie of his office geuen to him by his prince ought to be his accessary, and his good lyfe for principall; in such maner that, by the rectitude of his iustice, they should fele the execucion therof.—Golden Boke, Let. 11.

The rector of the vniuersitie called to counsell all the doctors reges that were that tyme at Tholose.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 22.

And finally to feed Christ's people like good pastors and rectors, as the apostles calleth them, with their wholesome doctrine, and by their continual exhortations and monitions to reduce them from sin and iniquity, so much as in them lyeth.—Burnet. Records, vol. i. Addenda, No. 5.

So that the weight of all seems to rely Wholly upon thine own discretion;
Thy judgment now must only rectify
This frame of pow'r thy glory stands upon.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

To this cure of melancholy, amongst other things, the rectification of aire is necessarily required.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 259.

Proclaims himself a rectifier of nature,
And is believed so, getting more by keeping Mouths in their quarterly reparations,
Than knowing men for all their art and pains
In the cure of the whole body.
Shirley. The Bird in a Cage, Act ii. sc. 1.

It better becomes [holy men] to mourne than to laugh immoderately at scurrilities and foolish speeches, and at the obscene jests of stage-players and other vanities, which are wont to soften a Christian soule from the rigour of its recti- tude and uprightness.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vii. sc. 3.

—Resigning Joue his right
(As rector of the gods) to give the glory of the sight, Where he affecteth.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

—Why, had your bodyes
No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry Against the rectorship of judgment?
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

Dissembling grief, as one that knew not ill,
So can she rule the greatness of her mind,
As a most perfect rectress of her will,
Above the usual weakness of her kind.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. i.

A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tythe, and other oblations of the people, seporate or dedicate to God in any congregation, for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governour or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.

Spelman. Of the Rights of the Church.

But come, Latona; and thou king of flames,
With Phoebe, rectresse of chaste thoughts in dames,
Let me salute ye.—Chapman. Homer. Hymne to Apollo.

The same experiment I tried more than once with high rectified spirit of wine, which did immediately destroy all the light of the wood that was immersed in it.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 171.

Yet Nature's road must ever be preferr'd;
Reason is here no guide. but still a guard,
Tis hers to rectify, not overthrow,
And treats this passion more as friend than foe.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 2.

'The rectitude of his will is natural, necessary, and unalterable; and the reason why he never wills amiss is because he cannot.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 80.

If his lordship, by the present state of things, includes the rectification of them in a future state, I answer that the justice of God would not be more manifest, but equally and fully manifest in either case.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. App.

I must beg leave to assure certain modern rectifiers of prejudices, that the fathers are not commonly led away by a vain superstition as they affect to represent them.

Id. Ib. b. iv. s. 1.

Nor is the lowest herd incapable of that sincerest of pleasures, the consciousness of acting right, for rectitude does not consist in extensiveness of knowledge, but in doing the best according to the lights afforded.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 16.

Grant her indebted to what zealots call,
Grace undeserved, yet surely not for all;
Some beams of rectitude she yet displays,
Some love of virtue, and some power to praise.

Cowper. Truth.

The tithes of many things, as wood in particular, are in some parishes rectorial, and in some vicarial tithes.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 11.

RECTILINEAR. } Having, containing, or RECTILINEOUS. } consisting of, right or straight lines.

If the motion of gross bodies were according to mere mechanical laws, a bullet, suppose of lead or gold, cast up into the aire, would never descend again, but would persist in a rectilinear motion.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 13.

Now there are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures which can serve to this purpose.—Ray. Of the Creation, pt. i.

RE-CULE, v. See RECOIL.

RE-CULTIVATE, v. Fr. Recultiver; Lat. Col-ere, cultum; to till, to improve by tillage.

To till, to manure again; to improve by repeated tillage.

A bow that lies a while unbent, and a field that remains fallow for a time, grow never the worse, but afterwards the one sends forth an arrow more strongly, the other yields a better crop, being recultivated.—Howell, b. i. Let. 2. s. 5.

RE-CUMB, v. Lat. Re-cumbens, pres. part.

The French and Italian translations expressing neither position of session or recubation, doe onely say that he placed himselfe at the table.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 6.

But above all, they call not to mind that memorable shew of Germanicus, wherein twelve elephants danced unto the sound of musick; and after laid them down in the tricliniums or places of festival recumbency.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

Now in what order of recumbency Christ and the disciples were disposed is not so easily determined.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

Instead of this ἡμεροφωρία, some of our divines bring in a recumbence or reliance upon Christ for justification and salvation.—North. Light to Paradise, p. 54.

What shall we think of the loud and repeated cries of a faith which consists in lolling, rolling, and recumbent on Christ.—Allen. No Acceptance with God by Faith only, p. 23.

The king makes an overture of pardon and favour unto you upon condition, that any one of you will recumbe, rest, lean upon or roll himself upon the person of his son.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

It is this; that faith is not an assent to propositions of any kind, but a recumbency, leaning, resting, rolling upon, adherency to (for they express themselves in these several terms, and others like them) the person of Christ.—Id. Ib.

Have we not heard of a sort of Christianity, the very perfection of which seems to consist in the disparaging this duty of doing good, as much as is possible; crying it down as a heathen virtue, a poor blind piece of morality, a thing that will no way further our salvation; nay, so far from that, that it often proves a hindrance to it, by taking us off from that full reliance and recumbency that we ought to have on the righteousness of Jesus Christ only, in order to our salvation.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 3.

The sheep recumbent, and the sheep that graz'd,
All huddling into phalanx, stood, and gaz'd.
Cowper. The Needless Alarm.

The relaxation of the languid frame,
By soft recumbency of outstretch'd limbs,
Was bliss reserv'd for happier days. Id. Task, b. i.

RE-CUPERABLE. } It. Ricuperare; Sp.
RECUPERATION. } Recuperable; from Lat.
Recuperare, i. e. recipere, from recipere, to take back, to get back. See RECOVER.

That may be got back or obtained again.

And hard it is to ravish a treasure,
Which of nature is not recuperable.
Chaucer. On Woman's Chastity.

Therefore, if thou yet by counsaile arte recuperable,
Fle thou from idelnesse, and alway be stable.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 13.

The reproduction or recuperation of the same thing that was before.—More. Mysteries of Godliness, p. 225.

Recourse,—a running or flowing back; quick return; regress, retreat; access, (sc.) for aid or help—refuge.

I wol not tarien you, for it is prime,
And for it is no fruit, but losse of time,
Unto my purpose I wol have recours.
Chaucer. The Squires Tale, v. 10,390.

Then their nummed members began to be mowed with the heat, and their spirites, which were oppressed by force of ye colde, beganne to have their free recourse.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 220.

Vpon their countrie bordered the Nerutans, of whose nature and condicions Cesar founde thus muche by enquirye, that there was no recourse of merchants vnto them.
Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 53.

And so for a little pause he stood without flame, the flame departing and recoursing thrise ere the wood took strength to be the sharper to consume him.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 924. Martyrdom of M. Bilney.

For if his grace were minded, or would intend to do a thing inique or unjust, there were no need to recur unto the pope's holiness for doing thereof.
Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 22.

But he, to shifte their curious request,
Gan causen why she could not come in place;
Her crased helth, her late recourse to rest,
And humid evening ill for sicke folkes case.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Till Rother, whence the name of Rotherham first begun,
At that her christ'ned town doth lose her in my Don,
Which, proud of her recourse, tow'rds Doncaster doth drive,
Her great'st and chieftest town.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

Troy. Who should withhold me?
Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees;
Their eyes ore-galled with recourse of teares.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act v. sc. 3.

urn, Towridge, let us back to the Sabrinian sea,
Where Thetis' handmaids still, in that recourseful deep,
With those rough gods of sea continual revels keep.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

Although the opinion at present be well suppressed, yet, from some strings of tradition and fruitful recurrence of error it is not improbable it may revive in the next generation also.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 1.

Therefore you do well to have recourse to your last evasion, that it was contrived by your enemies.

Dryden. Epistle to the Whigs.

Cæsar, thus injured, and unable to resist the faction of the nobles, which was now uppermost, (for he was a Marian,) had recourse to arms.—Id. Juvenal, Ded.

Next to lingering durable pains, short intermittent or swift recurrent pains precipitate patients unto consumption.
Harvey.

But once one of us reckoned near two and twenty recursions of the included pendulum, whilst the other reckoned but twenty of the pendulum that vibrated without.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 61.

We observed also, that when the receiver was full of air, the included pendulum continued its recursions about fifteen minutes (or a quarter of an hour) before it left off swinging.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 61.

Let us once more recur to the words of our Lord's prediction, instructive words upon which we never can too deeply meditate: He must go—he must suffer—he must be killed.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

RE-CURE, v. } Fr. Récurer, contracted
RECU'RE, n. } from recouvrir and recouvrer, RECU'RELESS. } to recover, (qv.)
To get back again; to heal again.

Freedome of kinde so lost hath he
That neuer may recured be.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

For mercy, ruth, grace, and eke pite
Exiled be, that I may not attaine, Recure to find of mine adversite.
Id. The Complaint of the Black Knight.

Acta res est, the matter is past recure or past remedie.
Udal. Floweres, fol. 156.

And, backe retourning, took her wonted way
To ronne her timely race, whilst Phæbus pure
In westerne waves his weary wagon did recure.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Which to recure, we heartily do sollicite
Your gracious selfe to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 7.

This said, he gave his wound in charge to Pæon, who applied
Such soveraigne medicines, that as soone, the paine was qualified
And he recured.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

No steele could shield them from his cutting brand,
But whom he hits without recure he dies.
Fairfax. Tasso, b. viii. s. 22.

But no such speedless flight Patroclus let his speare performe, that on the breast did light
Of his brave foe, where life's strings close about the solid heart,
Impressing a recurelesse wound, his knees then left their part,
And let him fall. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

Whether ill tendment, or recurelesse paine,
Procure his death; the neighbours all complaine,
Th' unskilful leech murdered his patient,
By poyson of some foule ingredient.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 4.

RE-CURVATE, v. } Words used princi-RECURVATION. } pally in descriptions of RECURVOUS. } Natural History. (See CURVE, INCURVE.) Lat. Recurvare, (re, and curvus), to bow backwards.
To bow, bend, arch—back or backwards; to reflect.

When it [the wind-pipe] ariseth from the lungs, it ascendeth out directly unto the throat, but descending first into a capsular reception of the breast bone, by a serpentine and trumpet recurvation, it ascendeth again into the neck.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

In others I have observed long recurvous tails, longer than their whole bodies.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6.

The upper mandible of the Saury is slightly recurvated.

RECUSA'TIVE. } generally—
To refuse, to reject, to deny.

And also doe by these presentes refuse, recuse, and decline you my saide lord, and your saide colleagues, and your iurisdiction vpon causes aforesaide.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1207. an. 1550. Bonner's Second Recusation.

Yet she [the queen] nevertheless persisting in her former wilfulness, layd in her appeal, which also by the said judges was likewise recused.—Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 28.

The principall catholique recusants (least they should stirre vp any tumult in the time of the Spanish inuasion) were sent to remaine at certaine convenient places.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 595.

And he hath (to his knowledge) iustly certified Hugh Raulins, parson of Tinby, for his wilfull recusancy of two other personages.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1408. an. 1555. Bp. Farrar's Answer.

He [Boner] to deface his authoritie (as he thought) did also then exhibite in writing a recusation of the secretaries judgement against him.—Id. Ib. p. 1205. an. 1549

We all know that popish recusants obstinately refuse to take the oath of supremacy or allegiance, some of them that toke it having beene excommunicated by their priests as a reward.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. i. p. 2.

There is another reason why a man can be good or bad only by the act of his will, and not of any other faculty, because the act of the will produces material and permanent events; it is acquisitive and effective, or recusative and destructive, otherwise than in it is in any other faculties.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1. Rule 1.

There is also an inferior species of recusancy (refusing to make the declaration against popery enjoined by statute 30 Car. II. st. 2. when tendered by the proper magistrate) which, if the party resides within ten miles of London, makes him an absolute recusant convict.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

Piers Plouhman, p. 24.

Tho gan the veine of Troilus to bleed,
For he was hit, and woxe all redde for shame,
Aha, (quod Pandare,) here beginneth game.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

Ever when that I speke of his falshe
For shame of him my chekes waxen rede;
Algaies they begynnen for to glowe.
For rednesse have I nou, right wel I knowe,
In my visage.—Id. Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,566.

— The nettle, whiche vp renneth,
The fresshe red rose brenneth,
And maketh him fade, and pale of hewe.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Whie rather doth he not expostulate in this behalfe with ye great saint maker of Rome, who hath redded them much more than euer did I? For he did redde and died them with their own bloud, whereas I did but onlie colour them with red letters. And thus for matter of my calendar enough.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 537. Defence of Lord Cobham.

At th' upper end there sate, yelad in red
Downe to the ground, a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod menaged.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Which our countreyemen are wont to call the red sea, and the Greekes Erythraem, of a king named Erythras; or (as some thinke) because the sea, by reason of the reflection and beating of the sunne beames, seemeth of a reddish colour. There be that suppose that this rednesse is occasioned of the sand and ground which is red; and others again, that the very water is of the owne nature so coloured.
Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 23.

He was somewhat given to be red-faced, and had a pair of staring eyes in his head.—North. Plutarch, p. 288.

— His ship, Joue strooke
With red-hot flashes, peece-meale in the seas,
And all his friends and souldiers, succourlesse, Perisht but he. Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

But soon as morning, from her orient bed,
Had tinged the mountains with her earliest red,
They joined the steeds, and on the chariots sprung.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

— The parted lip,
Like the red rose-bud moist with morning dew, Breathing delight. Thomson. Summer.

What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was formed push'd on the redd'ning

But when I inquired, whether or no this white mixture being skilfully kept awhile upon the cupel would not let go its arsenic, which made whiteness its predominant colour, and return to the reddishness of copper, I was assured of the affirmative.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 721.

He grasps the ponderous shield and flaming blade,
The sword that Vulcan for his father made,
Of matchless temper, which the fiery God
Had plunged red-hissing in the Stygian flood.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xii.

The red-breast warbles still, but is content
With slender notes, and more than half suppress,
Pleased with his solitude, and sitting light
From spray to spray, where'er he rests he shakes
From many a twig the pendant drops of ice,
That tinkle in the wither'd leaves below.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

REDA'CT, v. Lat. Redactum, past part. of redigere, (re, and agere,) to drive back.

To drive or force back; to drive or force; to bring or reduce.

Then was the teste or potsherd [the brasse, golde, and syluer] redaite into duste.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 2.

Plants they had, but metals whereby they might make use of those plants, and redact them to any form or instruments of work, were yet (till Tubal Cain) to seek.

Bp. Hall. The Character of Man.

REDARGU'TORY. } guere, (re, and arguere, from Gr. Apyos, clear, manifest.)

To argue against; to answer a prior argument;
to disprove, to refute, to reprove.

And these [experiments of humane affairs] being the immediate consequents of such doctrines are with some more certainty of observation redargued then the speculative.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 12.

But as yet people were converted by miracles, and preaching, and disputing, and hereticks by the same means were redargued, and all men instructed, none tortured for their opinion.—Id. Ib. § 14.

The last of which three thus wittily redargues the pretended findeing of coine, graved with the image and inscription of Augustus Caesar in the American mines, mentioned by Marianus Siculus in his historie of Spaine.

Hakewill. Apologie. Adv.

Besides thou doest verily contemne these things, in which there is likewise terror of conscience, redargution of thy deeds, feare of punishments and accusations, and inevitable torments.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 4.

Therefore we must use such words as are most significant of our meaning, most expressive of our grief and sorrow for him, and which we think most apt to expose the vice that we reprove, and make it most odious and hateful, keeping still within the bounds of a sober and friendly redargution.

Hopkins. Ser. Lev. xix. 17.

My privileges are an ubiquitary, circumambulatory, specu-latory, interrogatory, redargutory immunity over all the privy lodgings.—Carew. Caelum Britannicum.

Yet as long as they revered it, it was not irrational in him to urge them with it, and employ it to the redargution of their insolence.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 274.

REDDITION. Fr. Reddition; Lat. Redditio, from reddere, to give back, (re, dare.)

A redelivery, restoration; a rendering.

Two cases onely are excepted, pamage or apennage, (aliments to be exhibited to his children or brethren,) yet so as the clientelary right be always retained; again, if warlike necessitie require it, yet with a pact of reddition.

Prynne. The Sovereigne Power, pt. iv. p. 167.

The Colledge of Rhemes render μετανοεε, word for word after their vulgar Latin, agite poenitentiam, do penance, which is so absurd a reddition, that their interest and design is more apparent than their skill in grammar, or their ingenuity.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 2. § 1.

RE'DDOUR. Fr. Roideur, from roidir, to stiffen, to harden; which Duchat derives from rigidus, and Skinner from rudis.

Firmness, strength, force, vigour, power.

And sith an hert is so streined,
The reddour ought to be restrained,
To hym that male bet awaye,
Whan he mote to nature obeie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

There maie no lawe hym iustifie
By reddour, ne by compaign,
That he ne wol after his wille,
Whome that hym liketh saue or spille.—Id. Ib. b. v.

Ye have now caught, and fettred in prison
Troyans inow, and if your willes be,
My child with one may have redemption.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

Thys worde redeme, that in his mouthe dyd sounde,
Dyd putte Dauid, it semeth unto me,
As in a trauunce, to star upon the grounde,
And with hys thoughte the hyghte of heaven to see.
Wyatt. Ps. 130. The Author.

Hee wyll redeme our deadly drowping state.
Gascoigne. De profundis. The Auctor.

None other then such as haue aduentured in the first redemptionaries, which will be very chargeable.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 176.

And thou moost mylde mother and vyrgyn moost pure,
That barest swete Jhesu, the worldys redempture,
That shynyst and florysshed as flowre moost sure.
Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1326.

For no way else they said, but this, could be
Their wrong detained honour to redeem;
Which true-bred blood should more than life esteem.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

And know, lost Nature! this resemblance was Thy franke Redeemer, in ascension shown;
When hell he conquer'd in the desperate cause,
Hell which, before, man's common grave was grown.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 7.

— Till to her loved sire
The black-ey'd damsell he resign'd; no redemptoric hire, Tooke for her freedome; not a gift; but all the ransome

That redeeming in the sacred Scripture language signifies not precisely paying an equivalent, is so clear, that nothing can be more.—Locke. Paraphrase of Ep. to Romans, c. 3.

'Tis obvious to any one who reads the New Testament, that the doctrine of redemption, and consequently of the gospel, is founded upon the supposition of Adam's fall.
Id. Reasonableness of Christianity.

Unless you have a full idea of the whole work of redemp- tion, and can tell as well what belongs to a redeemer, and a Judge of the whole universe, as you can what belongs to a rector of a parish, you can pass no certain judgement.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 84.

If a pawnbroker receives plate or jewels as a pledge or security for the repayment of money lent thereon on a day certain, he has them upon an express contract or condition to restore them, if the pledgor performs his part by redeem- ing them in due time.—Blackstone. Comment. b. ii. c. 30.

Money is frequently sunk in France upon what are called contracts for the constitution of a rent, that is, perpetual annuities redeemable at any time by the debtor upon payment of the sum originally advanced, but of which this re- demption is not exigible by the creditor, except in particular cases.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

RE-DELIVER, v. } Re, de, and liberare, REDELIVERY. } liberum facere, to free or make free; to give liberty; to give up, to resign.

To give up (sc.) the possession of a thing from one to another; to put or place in the hands or possession of another; to return, to restore.

But at the coming of Cesar when thinges were altered, the Heduanes had theyr hostages redelivered, theyr old alyes and confederaces restored, new brought in by Cesar.
Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 154.

Vt eam suis restituiam ac reddam. That I maye restore and surrendre or redeliuer, hir vnto hir parentes or kinsfolkes.—Udal. Flowres, fol. 41.

Whether to suffer the sayde mencioned mariage to take effecte, and procede to a conclusion, or els to requyre a repaymēt and redelyuery of the summes of money ap-prompted and layde out for the same purpose.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 22.

Wherefore Porsena did easily grant them peace, upon condition that they should redeliver back again to him the lands they had gotten before with the countrey of Thuscane, with their prisoners also which they had taken in this war.
North. Plutarch, p. 89.

RE-DEMAND, v. It. Ridomandare; Lat.
Demandare, (de, and mandare, q. d. in manus dare, to give into the hands,) to ask from the hands of another; generally,—to ask, or require.
To ask or require, back or again.

They would say, God hath appointed us captains of these our bodily forts, which, without treason to that majesty, were never to be delivered over till they were redemanded.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

Nor is it her sickleness, that, in pursuance of this impartial love, she seems to desert her former favourites when she confers her favours on new persons, since she bereaves not the first possessors of them with intention, but only by consequent, as being not able to lend her benefits to new necessities, without redemanding them of her former debtors.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 31.

RED

The chiefs with mutual hatred she inspires,
But both against their aged parent fires,
Sequester'd in a distant cell he lies,
Implores the fiends, and redemands his eyes.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. vii.

RE-DESCEND, v. Fr. Redescendre; Lat. Descendere, (de, and scandere, to climb.)
To climb, to come or go down again

O! let them re-descend, and still
My soul with holy raptures fill.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 52.

REDINTEGRATE, or } See INTEGER. Fr.
REINTEGRATE, v. & adj. } Réintégrer; It. Re- REDINTEGRATION. } integrare; Sp. Re- integrar; Lat. Redintegrare, in integrum restituere, to restore to its wholeness, integrity, or entireness.
To restore again to its wholeness or soundness;
to restore anew; to renew or renovate.

For that heavenly city shall be restored and reintegrate with good Christian people.—Fisher. On the Seven Psalms.

The falling from a discord to a concord, which maketh great sweetness in musick, hath an agreement with the affections, which are reintegrated to the better, after some dislikes.—Bacon. Natural History, § 113.

Charles the eight the French king, by the vertue and good fortune of his two immediate predecessors, Charles the seventh his grand-father, and Lewes the eleventh his father, received the kingdom of France in more flourishing and spread estate, then it had bene of many yeares before; being redintegrate in those principall members, which anciently had been portions of the crowne of France, and were after desseuered.—Id. Hen. VII. p. 40.

So also it is necessary that the habit be retracted by a habit, that every wound may have its balsam, and every broken bone be bound up and redintegrate.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. § 4.

The demoniack body, being divided, is quickly redin- tegrated by coalescence, as air or water.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 814.

And the same we doe onely to the conservation and redin- tegration of the rights of our crowne, as we be bound, and not that we should in any wise aggravate or oppresse our subjects whom we desire to rule by lenity and gentleness.

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. ii. p. 39.

Desiring the king nevertheless, as being now freed from her who had been the occasion of all this, to take hold of the present time, and to reintegrate himself with the pope.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. pt. i. p. 117.

Whence it seemed reasonable to expect that, upon the re-union of the same saline particles into such a body as they had constituted before, the redintegrated sal armoniac, having near upon the same texture, would, upon its being redissolved, produce the same, or a not much inferiour degree of coldness.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 148.

Four or five years ago I published a little physico-chymical tract about the different parts and redintegration of nitre.

Id. Ib. To the Reader, p. 3.

When Moses, with indignation for their idolatry, broke the tables of the law, God re-established them, but when for a greater guilt God himself broke them, there is no possible redintegration.

Bate. Divinity of the Christian Religion, c. 4.

RE-DISBOURSE, v. Lat. Bursa; Gr. Βύρα, the hide or skin of which the bag called burse or purse was made.

To pay back again; to repay.

But when the floude is spent, then backe againe

His borrowed waters forst to re-disburse,
He sends the sea his owne with double gaine,
And tribute eke withall, as to his souveraine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

RE-DISPOSE, v. Lat. Dispositum, set apart, arranged.

To set in order or arrange again.

It hath been shewn that spirit hath no parts; and therefore it stands in need of no reparation, or redisposing its parts, as the body doth.—Baxter. On the Soul, vol. i. p. 339.

RE-DISSEISIN. } Fr. Dessaizir, (to de-REDISSEISOR. } prive of saisir, i. e. seizure, hold, tenure, or possession.)—

To deprive again of seizure, hold, tenure, or possession.

If a person disseised recover seisin of the land by assise of novel disseisin, and be again disseised of the same tenements by the same disseisor, he shall have a writ of re- disseisin, and if he recover therein, the redisseisor shall be imprisoned.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 10.

RED

RE-DISSOLVE, v. Lat. Dissolvere, to loosen, to melt.

To melt again; to reduce again to a fluid or liquid state.

An eminently learned and judicious person that he [the mineralist] named to me had, by dissolving gold in a certain kind of aqua regis, and after, by reduction of it into a body, redissolving it again, and repeating this operation very often, reduced a very great if not much the greater part of an ounce of gold into such a white powder.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 95.

REDITION. Lat. Reditio, from red-ire, to go back. A going back; a return.

Adresse suite to my mother; that her meane
May make the day of your redition scene.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

RE-DIVVED, i. e. Revived.

I had rather spend my time and breath in exhorting all good christians to keep close to their old tenets, and to beware of all either new-devised, or re-divved errors of opinion: whereof the last age of ours is deplorably fruitful.

Bp. Hall. Revelation Unrevealed, s. 31.

RE/DOLENT. } Fr. Rédolent; Lat. Redolens, RE/DOLENCE. } redolere, (re, and olere, to RE/DOLENCY. } smell or cause to smell,) to cast back a smell or scent. A favourite word with old writers.

Throwing forth, emitting, a scent, a perfume, a sweet smell; emitting an odour or fragrance, odoriferous, fragrant; breathing forth sweetly.

My chamber is strowed with mirre and incense,
With sote sauring aloes, and with sinamome,
Breathing an aromatic redolence.

Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

This gardeyn is evir grene, and full of May flowris,
Of rede, white, and blue, and othir fresh colouris,
The which ben so redolent, and sentyn so about,
That he must be right lewde therin shuld route.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

— Olive of oiles, faire and thick,
And redolent cedre.—Id. In Commendation of our Lady.

And like as brides when they be decked in gorgeous and gaie garments, and therewithall saured as of the redolent smell of Christ, so that it might be supposed them to be anointed with some sweet balm.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 43. an. 167.

And besides the pretious and costlie gems, namelie of smaradgs of most redolent greene.—Id. Ib. p. 134. an. 933.

In this graue full derke nowe is her bowre,
That by her lyfe was sweete and redolent.

Fabyan, vol. i. c. 238.

In Cappadocia, the minerall salt which they dig is of a yellow saffron colour, transparent, and of a most redolent smell.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 7.

Their flowers attract spiders with their redolency.

Mortimer.

While kine to pails distended udders bring,
And bees their honey redolent of spring.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

I feel the gales that from ye blow
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to sooth,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second spring.

Gray. On a View of Eton College.

RE-DOUBBLE, v. Fr. Redoubler; It. Rad- doppiare; Lat. Reduplicatus; re, du, Gr. Δuo, pli- care, πλεκ-ειν, to fold.

To double or fold over again; to repeat, to add to, to augment, to increase, again and again.

When she had said, redouble gan her nurse
Her steppes, forth on an aged woman's trot.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

— This latter grace;
Sister, I crave; have thou remorse of me:
Whiche if thou shalt vouchsafe, with heapes I shall Leave by my death redoubled vnto thee.

Id. Ib.

But he, not like a weary travelere,
Their sharp assault right boldly did rebut,
And suffred not their blowes to byte him nere,
But with redoubled buffes them backe did put.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

While from both benches with redoubled sounds
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

When the purpose we aim at does not ensue upon our first endeavours, the mind redoubles her efforts under an apprehension that a stronger exertion may succeed where a weaker did not.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 21.

RED

REDOUBT, n. Fr. Réduit, réduire, to withdraw, to retreat, (Cotgrave.) It. Ridotto, ridurre; Sp. Reduto, a military fortification within which the soldiers may withdraw or retreat, (Skinner.)

Yet who dares offer a redoubt to rear?
To cut a dike? or stick a stake up here
Before this work? where envy hath not cast
A trench against it, nor a batt'ry plac'd.

B. Jonson. On the Poems of Sir J. Beaumont.

Thus while he gazes round at length he spies
Where, fenced with strong redoubts, their navy lies;
Close underneath the walls.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. ix.

They build each other up with dreadful skill,
As bastions set point blank against God's will,
Enlarge and fortify the dread redoubt,
Deeply resolved to shut a Saviour out.

Cowper. Conversation.

Being greatly incommoded in their approaches by two redoubts at the distance of two hundred yards from the British lines, it was determined to attack them at the same time by different detachments of French and Americans.

Belsham. History of Great Britain, an. 1781.

REDOUBT, v. } Fr. Redouter, to fear, to REDOUBTABLE. } revere.

In redoubting of Mars and of his glorie.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale.

The ryght hyghe, excellent, and right vertuous prynees my ryghte redoughted lady my lady Margarete, by the grace of God suster unto the kynge of Englonde, and of France.

R. Gloucester, p. 700.

Certes in the time of Marcus Tullius, as himselfe wrytte in hys boke, that the renom of the common of Rome ne had not yet passed ne clomben ouer the mountaine that hight Caucasus, and yet was Rome well waxen and redoubled of the Parthes, and eke of other folke enhabyting about.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

The ambassadours cōceyued well the erles wordes, and sayde, Sir, than was than, and nowe is now; the kyng, whom God pardon, redoubted greatly y^e fortunes of the worlde, but the kyng our mayster that nowe is, hath another mynde and ymaginacion.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 31.

[These] thynges they sayd ought greatly to be redoubted and consydered.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 275.

Redoubted knights, and honourable dames,
To whom I leuell all my labour's end,
Right sore I feare least with unworthy blames
This odious argument my rymes shoud shend.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

The queen growing more redoutable and famous by the overthrow of the fleet of eighty-eight, the Easterlings fell to despair of doing any good.—Howell, b. i. Let. 3. s. 6.

Plutarch was willing to honour the Muses, joyning into one body so many members and parts of histories offered unto the posterity, that in the mean time he hath accompanied, and as it were environed them with darts, and targets of Mars redoutable.—North. Plutarch.

RE-DOUND, v. } See ABOUND. Fr. Re-
REDOUNDING, n. } donder; It. Ridondare; Sp.
REDUNDANT. } Redundar; Lat. Redundare,

REDUNDANTLY. } or overflow.

To flow or run back upon, (sc.) copiously or fully; to return or remit; to result, fully or plentifully; to be replete with.

Redundant,—overflowing or superfluous; full,
copious, plentiful, replete.

He bargained wyth them to delaye the warres whiche they tooke in hande, as though the damage therof should not equally redounde to the displeasure of the whole Empire.

Goldyng. Justine, fol. 34.

That there should not be left room for him to enter if he list, but that he should be chief contrahent in it; with full provision that nothing in it redowned to his prejudice.
Upon these points you tarried.

Wyatt. Memorial to the King, Nov. 1637.

Redounding teares did choke th' end of her plaint,
Which softly echoed from the neighbour wood.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

Such as were next to the abby, herde clerely the redound- ynge of the Naueroyse, for as they went, their harneys clat-teredde and made some noyse.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 185.

Howbeit, this is yet my comfort, and no small contentment I take herein, that my labors and travels (excessive and infinit though they be) cannot be despised, but the contempt will redound likewise to dame Nature her selfe.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 7.

Lest thy redundant and superfluous juice
Should fading leaves instead of fruits produce,
The pruner's hand, with letting blood, must quench
Thy heat and thy exuberant parts retrench.

Denham. Of Old Age, pt. iv.

— To visitants a gaze,
Or pitied object, these redundant locks
Robustious to no purpose clustring down,
Vain monument of strength.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

So wars among mankind are a kind of necessary consequence of redundance of mankind, and will by a kind of natural necessity make itself room, and give itself ease by the destruction of others, if it can get power and opportunity to do it.—Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 215.

Wars seem to be in a manner a natural consequence of the over-plenitude and redundancy of the number of men in the world.—Id. Ib.

But that Orphick and Pythagorick love was nothing else but σπορος and ευσπορία, infinite riches and plenty, a love of redundancy and overflowing fulness, delighting to communicate itself.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 375.

Arguing from the pituitous excrements found there, that they were made onely for a receptacle of such useless redundancy is ineptly inferred.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 9.

We find St. Paul mentioning the redemption of the Jews from the law as a matter that did nearly concern and much redound to the benefit of the Gentiles.

Sharp, vol. v. Dis. 3.

The big redundant flood of trade,
To which ten thousand thousand labours join
Their several currents, till the boundless tide,
Rolls in a radiant deluge o'er the land.

Thomson. Britannia.

The Italians are forced upon it, once or twice in every line, because they have a redundancy of vowels in their language.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

When the event was found to answer to the promise, Moses gave command that the redundant portion should be prepared and laid by for the meal of the succeeding day.

Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

Yet more than these to meditation's eyes,
Great Nature's self redundantly supplies.
Her presence, best of models! is the source
Whence genius draws augmented power and force.

Mason. Fresnoy. Art of Painting.

RE-DRESS, v. } Fr. Redresser; It. Ridire;

REDRE/SSIVE. } To straighten, set or make straight or right again; to reform, repair, amend, or make amends for; to remedy, or afford, or supply a remedy; to succour.

But right as floures through the cold of night
I closed, stoupen in hir stalkes lowe,
Redressen hem ayen the sunne bright,
And spreaden in hir kinde course by rowe.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

Redresse me moder, and eke me chastise,
For certainly my fader's chastising
Ne dare I not abiden in no wise,
So hideous is his full reckening.—Id. A. B. C.

So were it good to taken hede,
That fyrst a kynge his owne dede,
Between the virtue and the vice,
Redresse.

Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

To the intent to sollicite the said king to do, by his mediation, for the remedying and redressing of those foresaid injuries and wrongfull dealings of the pope in this behalfe.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 979. an. 1535. Hen. VIII. to the Pope.

Let them be well aduised of their owne saluation and cease to hate and persecute the gospel of the sonne of God, for feare lest they feeble him once a redresser, and reuenger of his owne cause.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 742.

When Cesar vnderstoode thys, he comforted the hearts of the Galles with fayre woordes, promysing them that he wold see a redresse in the matter.—Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 26.

That same most best redresser or reformer is God.
Acclastus, a Comedy, (1540.)

Where was a cave ywrought by wondrous art,
Deepe, darke, uneasy, dolefull, comfortlesse,
In which sad Aesculapius far apart
Emprison'd was in chaines remedlesse:
For that Hippolytus rent corse he did redresse.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

All straight to better safety flock apace,
None rest to help the ruin while they may;
The peril great, and doubtfull the redress,
Men are content to leave right in distress.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

Don Quixote of the Mancha, the righter of wrongs, the redresser of injuries.—Shelton. Don Quixote, c. 4.

Who, touch'd with human woe, redressive search'd
Into the horrors of the gloomy jail!—Thomson. Winter.

And now had Greece eternal fame acquir'd,
And frighten'd Troy within her walls retir'd,
Had not sage Helenus her state redrest,
Taught by the Gods that moved his sacred breast.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

And as the Cretan labyrinth of old,
With wandering ways, and many a winding fold,
Involv'd the weary feet, without redress,
In a round error, which denied recess.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. v.

Thus heav'nward all things tend. For all were once Perfect, and all must be at length restor'd.
So God has greatly purpos'd; who would else
In his dishonour'd works himself endure
Dishonour, and be wronged without redress.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

REDUB, v. } Fr. Radouer, to piece, mend,
REDUBBING, n. } renew, patch, or botch up, (Cotgrave.) The etymology of this word is uncertain. See Adouer, Radouer, in Menage, and Daube in Wachter. Menage explains radouer, reficere—

To refit, to repair or make reparation; to repay or make repayment.

What should I longer make: into my chamber all they thrust.

With fals Vlisses help. O Gods, redubbe them vengeance just.

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

Much his majesty doth marvel that you, Master Wyatt, are not more speedy in your advertisements, considering the time and importance of affairs now in treaty among Christian princes. It shall be good that you redubbe that negligence.

Wyatt. Cromwell to Sir T. Wyatt, May 4, 1538.

Some notable provision and expedicion, by comen consent of all princes, might be had and made for the redubbing of the said calamities, repressing of heresies, and withstanding the malice of the racke.

State Papers, 1527. Wolsey to Hen. VIII.

But the losse of Calice, Hammes, and Guysnes with all the countrie on that side the sea, (which followed sone after,) was suche a buffet to Englande as happened not in more than an hundred yere before, and dishonor, wherwith this realme shall be blotted vntill God shall geue power to redubbe it with some like requittall to the French.

Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1369.

A good man will go a little out of his road to reduce the wandring traveller; but if he will not return, it will be an unreasonable compliance to go along with him to the end of his wandring.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3. Rule 19.

This once select nation of God, and the inhabitants of the land flowing with milk and honey, is become now a scorned, squandered people all the earth over, being ever since incapable of any coalition or reducement into one body politick.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 8.

Consequently they resolve, that all manner of life whatsoever is generable and corruptible, or educible out of nothing, and reducible to nothing again, and these are the Anaximandrian and Democritick atheisms.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 137.

I vow'd Vlysses should, before the grace
Of his returne, encounter woes enow
To make that purchase deare: yet, did not vow
Simply against it, since thy brow had bent
To his reduction; in the fore-consent
Thou hadst vouchsaf't it.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiii.

So that it should seem there needed no other reductive of the numbers of men to an equability, than the wars that have happened in the world.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 215.

The thing itself is made plausible by the reducibleness of ice back again into water.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 50.

It is not unlikely but that spirit of wine, which by its pungent taste, and by some other qualities, that argue it better (especially its reducibleness, according to Helmont, into alcali and water).—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 538.

Let him therefore first make the proper reduction in the account, and then see what it amounts to.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 186.

It is proper the young students should be informed that some research is to be made, and that they should be habituated to consider every excellence as reducable to principles.—Reynolds, vol. i. Dis. 8.

Here you see the Messiah's business described in various branches; which are reducible, however, to these: the final judgment, when the wicked shall be destroyed; a previous trial or experiment of the different tempers and dispositions of men, in order to that judgment; and something to be done for their amendment and improvement.

Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 32.

REDUNDANT. See REDOUND.

RE-DUPLICATE. } See REDOUBLE. Lat.
REDUPLICATION. } Reduplicatus.
REDUPLICATIVE. } Reduplication is a common term in grammar.

Embrace that reduplicate advice of our Saviour, I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 12.

This is evident, when the mark of exclusion is put: as when we speak of a white thing, adding the reduplication as white: which excludes all other considerations.—Digby.

To both these may be applied the termes of reduplication and saturation: the former, when essence or substance is but once redoubled into itself or into another; the latter, when so oft, that it will not easily admit any thing more.

H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 2. Axiom 9.

Shouting as they the heavens would have brast
That all the woods and dales, where he did flie,
Did ring againe, and loud re-echo to the skie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 7.

The hills and vallies here and there resound
With the re-echoes of the deepe-mouth'd hound.
Brown. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

And goats he brought, the pride of all their race,
Imported in a shallop not his own;
The dome re-echoed to their mingled moan.

REEF, n. } rapere) the rif or rist is, carbasa substringere, vela contrahere, &c., perhaps from reaf-ian, rapere, to seize, to pull, to drag.
To drag or draw in.

Trinc. Up aloft, lads. Come, reef both top-sails.
Dryden. The Enchanted Island, Act i. sc. 1.

A lowering squall obscures the southern sky,
Before whose sweeping breath the waters fly;
Its weight the top-sails can no more sustain,
Reef top-sails, reef! the master calls again.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2.

Reefs are certain divisions or spaces by which the principal

Dampier. Voyages, vol. i. an. 1681.

The riff, or bank of rocks, on which the French fleet was lost, runs along from the east end to the northward about three miles, then trends away to the westward, making, as it were, a half-moon.—Id. Id. Note.

That a less dangerous access may be discovered, I think there is little reason to doubt, and to find it little more seems to be necessary than to determine how far the principal, or outer reef, which bounds the shoals to the eastward, extends towards the north.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 5.

Orecovered quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reekie shankes and yellow chappels (chapless) skulls.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iv. sc. 1.

A good man would be loath to be taken out of the world reeking hot from a sharp contention with a perverse adversary, and not a little out of countenance to find himself in this temper translated into the calm and peaceful regions of the blessed, where nothing but perfect charity and good-will reign for ever.—Tillotson. Ser.

Now from th' ensanguin'd Ister's reeking flood,

Bolingbroke. State of Europe, Let. 8.

Thou that art known where Pleasure is ador'd,
That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist,
And wandering eyes, still leaning on the arm
Of Novelty, her fickle, frail support.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

— Such continual zig-zags in a book,
Such drunken reelings have an awkward look,
And I had rather creep to what is true,
Than rove and stagger with no mark in view.
Id. Conversation.

The weavers of linen and hempen cloth, the principal manufacturers of the country, as well as all other artificers subservient to them, wheel-makers, reel-makers, &c., may

RE-ELE'CT, v. } Lat. Eligere, (e, and legere; REELECTION. } Gr. Αεγ-ειν, to gather, to take, to choose.)

To take or choose out again; to rechoose.

I take the question to be strictly this: whether or no it be the known, established law of Parliament, that the expulsion of a member of the House of Commons of itself creates in him such an incapacity to be re-elected, that at a subsequent election any votes given to him are null and void, and that any other candidate who, except the person expelled, has the greatest number of votes, ought to be the sitting member.—Junius, Let. 16.

This they wisely consider as an expulsion, and from the permission, in this case, of a re-election, infer that every other expulsion leaves the delinquent entitled to the same indulgence.—Johnson. False Alarm.

RE-EMBA'RK, v. Fr. Rembarquer; Sp. Rem-barcar.

To go or cause to go, to put (again) into a bark or barge, or boat; on shipboard; (met.) to go upon, enter, or engage again in any risk or enterprise.

Having performed this ceremony [firing three volleys] upon the island, which we called Possession Island, we re-embarked in our boat, but a rapid ebb tide setting N.E.
made our return to the vessel very difficult and tedious.

RE-EMBA'TTLE, v. A.S. Beat-an, to beat, to strike, to fight.

To fight again; arm or prepare again—for fight.

They, hard'n'd more by what might most reclame,
Grieving to see his glorie, at the sight
Took envie, and aspiring to his highth, Stood re-imbattell'd fierce.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

RE-EMBRACE, v. To take or hold within the arms, (brachia.)

To take, to infold, again, (within the arms;) to inclose or include.

—The glittering spires
Float in the wave, and break against the shore;
So break those glittering human joys.
The faithless morning smil'd, he takes his leave,
To re-embrace in extacies, at eve.

Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

RE-ENACT, v. Lat. Agere, actum, to do.

To put again in act or motion; to put again in force, (sc.) as a law; to decree again to be law.

The construction of ships was forbidden to senators by a law made by Claudius the tribune, and re-enacted by the Julian law of concessions.—Arbuthnot. On Coins.

RE-ENCOUNTER. See RENCOUNTER.

RE-ENCOURAGEMENT. To encourage is to give heart (cor) or courage.

Inspiration or animation again with courage, with strength or vigour of heart.

But, O (my Wernock) how am I to thee
Obligen, for thy keene reencouragements
To skill so mickle lov'd and sought of me
As this of making with art's elements!

Browne. Willie & Old Wernock.

RE-ENFIERCE, v. To be or cause to be fierce, (ferus.)

To render fierce, cruel, savage—again; to add to the fierceness or savageness.

Whereat renfierst with wrath and sharp regret,
He stroke so hugely with his borrow'd blade,
That it empiert the Pagan's burganet.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

RE-ENFORCE, or Force. Lat. Fortis,
RE-INFO'RCE, v. } strong; Fr. Renforcer;
RE-ENFORCEMENT. } It. Rinforzare; Sp. Reforzar.

To give force or strength to again; to add to, or to give additional, strength or power; to strengthen again, or to a greater degree.

I am yet wyllynge to treate of this matter more at length, to renforce this hystorye, and to brynge it to the poynte that I wolde come vnto.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 114.

So the siege being levied, the Earl of Shrewsbury entred it, and victualled and reinforced it.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. ii. King Edward's Journal.

The incitation of this youthful knight,
Besides amends for their retreat to make,

With shunlesse destinie: aydelesse came off,
And with a sudden re-inforcement strucke Coriole like a planet.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

—The dreadfull sagittary
Appaulls our numbers, haste we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we perish all.

Id. Troyl. & Cres. Act v. sc. 5.

It pleased God, in the most solemn and pompous manner, to proclaim the high dignity of God the Son, to reinforce his rightful claim of homage, and to command heaven and earth, angels and men, to pay him all honour, reverence, and adoration.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 105.

So then ordinary Christians may thus remotely have the use of antiquity (not to mention other nearer ways) with respect to the sense of Scripture, as well as with regard to its authenticity; and their faith may be both strengthened and brightened by this additional reinforcement.

Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 287.

RE-ENGAGE, v. To bind or pledge (by certain bonds or gages.)

To bind or pledge again; to undertake, to enter upon—again, (sc. battle.)

It put him in so fierce a rage,
He once resolved to re-engage.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

RE-ENJOY, v. Lat. Gaud-ere, to be glad, or to gladden.

To have, to use—again with gladness, or pleasure; to take delight, feel pleasure—in again.

Those whom it hid, with horreur
Their ashy lodgings leave,
To re-enjoy the light.

Stirling. Alexandrian Tragedy, Chor. 1.

Howell, b. i. Let. 10.

RE-ENKINDLE, or } To light or set fire
RE-INKINDLE, v. } to, (accendere.)

To light or set fire again to; to heat, to inflame—again.

For so a taper, when its crown of flame is newly blowne off, retains a nature so symbolical to light, that it will with greediness re-inkindle and snatch a ray from the neighbour fire.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 2. s. 2.

If any of them should have any dispositions to virtue and divine love re-inkindled in them; meer philosophy would conclude, that in time they might then be deliver'd from their sad durance.—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

RE-ENTER, v. } Fr. Rentrer; It. Rien-
RE-ENTRY. } tràre; Lat. Intrare, to move, RE-ENTRANCE. } go, or come into.

To go or come, to move or cause to move, into again; to put or place in or within again; in possession again.

For the loue and request of the pope, he was content that Thurstinus should reenter his realme, and quietlie inioy his prelatship.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 180. an. 1118.

About the latter end of his reigne, the Danes, which before had invaded the realme, in the time of King Egbert, as is above declared, now made their reentrie againe.

Hall. Hen. V. an. 4.

REF

Neither haue I [Luther] any more to say, vnlesse mine aduersaries with true and sufficient probations, grounded upon the Scripture, can reduce and resolve my minde, and refell mine errors, which they lay to my charge.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 777. an. 1521.

But the writings of the Fathers against Nouatians, Pelagians, and other heretikes of the like note, refell positions, whereby the foundation of Christian faith was ouerthrown by consequent only.—Hooker. On Justification, s. 25.

Isab. In briefe, to set the needlesse processe by:
How I perswaded, how I praid, and kneel'd,
How he refeld me, and how I replide.

Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act v. sc. 1.

Here many of the greatest of the land

Accus'd were of the act; strong proofs brought out;
Which strongly were refell'd. The lords all stand,
To clear their cause, most resolutely stout.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

REFER, v. Fr. Réferer; It. Riferire; Sp. Referir; Lat. Referre, (re, and ferre,) to bring or bear back. See RELATE.
REFERABLE, OR REFERRIBLE. To bear or bring back; to send back; to recur, remit, reduce, resort; to have respect or regard; to respect, to regard.

Mercurius to Cupide gave answer
And said, Sir king, my counsaile is that ye Referre you to the blest planet here,
And take to him the lowest of degree.

Chaucer. The Testament of Cresseide.

Indeede bookes of common places be verie necessary to induce a man into an orderlie general knowledge, how to referre orderlie, all that he readeth, ad certa rerum capita, and not wander in studie.

Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

Who was legate at the dooinge, who was referendarie, who was presidente, who was presente.—Jewel, p. 552.

There was a referment made from his majesty to my lord's grace of Canterbury, my lords of Durham and Rochester, and myself, to hear and order a matter of difference in the church of Hereford, &c.—Laud. Diary, p. 13.

At last, Pond men, said she, you are deceiv'd;
It is not he, 'tis I must be interred:
Not he, but I of life and soul bereav'd;

He lives in heav'n, among the saints referred.

Fletcher. Eliza.

As for those names of Ἀφροδίτη, Ζωγία, &c. they are all referable to Γαμος, which we have already taken notice of in our defence of the Cabbala.

More. The Cabbala, pt. iv. c. 4.

Acknowledging the primary substance to be the more adequate object of divine creation, but the secondary to be referrible also to the primary or centrall substance by way of causall relation.—Id. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 4.

Madam, we will ourself take time to hear Your cause at large. Wherein we will you have No other refrence but repair to us;
Who will accommodate this business.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

But descend
To some particular: this offence doth rise
Or fall in the degree or reference To persons sinn'd against.

The Gamester, Act v.

But let him chuse well his referendaries, for else he may be led by the nose.—Bacon. Ess. Of Sutors.

But to do good is not only our greatest duty, but our greatest interest and advantage, which is that that Solomon chiefly refers to in the text.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 3.

I have dwelt so long on this subject, that I must contract what I have to say in reference to my translation.

Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

I shall only take notice of those effects of lightning which seem referrible, partly to the celerity and manner of apulse, and partly to the distinct shapes and sizes of the corpuscles that compose the destructive matter.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 682.

The tendency of this discourse is to clear the artist's mind from a perplexed variety of rules and their exceptions, by directing his attention to an intimate acquaintance with the passions and affections of the mind, from which all rules arise, and to which they are all referable.—Reynolds, Dis. 8.

Practically, the rites of their ancient worship are to be forgotten, that is, laid aside: for they never were of any other importance than in reference to the Gospel, as the shadow is of no value but as it resembles the substance.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. p. 8.

RE-FERMENT, v. Lat. Fermentum, q. d. fervimentum, a ferendo, to throw into a heat.

To heat again; to have or cause to have an internal heat or commotion again.

REF

The admitted nitre agitates the flood,
Revives its fire, and referments the blood.

Blackmore. Creation, b. vi.

RE-FIGURE, v. Fr. Réfigurer.

To frame or form again; to fashion or shape again; to make again into a form, fashion, or shape.

The letters eke, that she of olde time

Had him sent, he would alone rede

An hundred sith, atwixt noone and prime,

Refiguring her shape, and her womanhede,

Within his herte.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,

If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee:

Then, what could death do if thou should'st depart,

Leaving thee living in posterity.—Shakespeare. Son. 6.

RE-FIL, v. To fill again; or to have, hold, or possess, or take possession of—the whole space again.

See! round the verge a vine-branch twines,

See! how the mimic clusters roll,

As ready to refil the bowl.—Broome. Anacreon. Ode.

RE-FIND, v. A. S. Find-an, to seek or search, and, consequentially, come or attain to.

To come to or meet with again; to see or perceive again; to invent, to discover—again.

Seven autumns past, he, in the eighth the same

Re-finding, said, If such your power so strange,

That they who strike you must their nature change,

Once more I'll trie.

Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

RE-FINE, v. Fr. Raffiner; It. Raffinàre; Sp. Refinar.

REFINEDLY. To finish highly again;

REFINEDNESS. to polish again, repeatedly,

REFINEMENT. highly; to brighten, to purify;

REFINER. to make or cause to be polite

REFINERY. or polished, clear, pure, bright,

REFINING, n. brilliant; to add to, increase, or improve the fineness, the purity; to clear away the coarseness.

And the grosse matter of this earthly myne

Which closeth it thereafter doth refyne,

Doing away the drosse which dims the light

Of that faire beame which therein is empyght.

Spenser. Hymne 2.

Such is the powre of that sweet passion,

That it all sordid baseness doth expell,

And the refyned mynd doth newly fashion

Unto a fairer forme.

Id. Hymne 1.

In a middling refinedness [clarity, in some editions] and quickness it [wine] is best.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 69.

The soul of man is capable of very high refinements, even to a condition purely angelical.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 1.

War it self is a greater refiner of spirits in little time.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 463.

Most of the peculiar words and phrases that either I, or any body else that will speak properly and intelligibly in this matter, make use of, are borrowed from the judicious and elegant contriver of them, the profound restorer and refiner of almost extinct Platonism.

Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, Pref.

The parts more pure, in rising are refin'd,

The gross and perishable lag behind.

Garth. Ovid. Metam. b. xiv.

Will any dog

Refinedly leave his bitches and his bones

To turn a wheel?

Dryden.

Sincerity to keep us from making professions and ostentations, (void of substance, of truth, of knowledge, of good purpose,) great semblances of peculiar sanctimony, integrity, scrupulosity, spirituality, refinedness, like those Pharisees, so often therefore taxed in the Scripture.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

Now seeking the truth is almost become as much a phrase among these gentlemen as seeking the Lord was among another set of refiners.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 47.

In my apprehension they had altogether as good take up with the dull way of lying, or with the common artifice of equivocation and mental reservation, as make use of such refinings as these.—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

This refined taste is the consequence of education and habit; we are born only with a capacity of entertaining this refinement, as we are born with a disposition to receive and obey all the rules and regulations of society; and so far it may be said to be natural to us, and no further.

Reynolds, Dis. 13.

While Grenada was in the hands of the French, there was a refinery of sugar, by claying, at least upon almost every plantation.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

REF

RE-FIT, v. } Fr. Fait, factum, ad hoc ap-REFITTING, n. } tum.

To suit or adopt again; to provide or furnish again with things fit or suitable or needful; to put into a fit, suitable state; to repair.

We want not cities, nor Sicilian coasts,
Where king Acestes Trojan lineage boasts;
Permit our ships a shelter on your shores,

Refitted from your woods with planks and oars.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. 1.

Close by a hollow rock again we sit,

New dress the dinner, and the beds refit,

Secure from sight, beneath a pleasing shade,

Where tufted trees a native arbour made.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

He will not allow that there are any signs of art in the make of our present globe, or that there was so great care taken in the refitting of it up again at the deluge.

Woodward.

Admiral Keppel therefore returned to Portsmouth to refit.
Belsham. History of Great Britain, an. 1778.

Another answered, and sayd, It might wel be

Naturally by compositions

Of angles, and of slie reflections;

And said that in Rome was swiche on.

Chaucer. The Squires Tale, v. 10,545.

But the sunne is thought to give no otherwise heat, but by way of angle in reflection, and not by his neerenesse to the earth.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 51.

Crooked Erimanthus wyth hys manye turnynges and reflexions is consumed by the inhabytours with wateryng their ground.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 232.

The day that beauteous was,

Twinkled as when you see the sun-beams in a glass,

That nimble being stirr'd flings up the trembling flame

At once, and on the earth reflects the very same.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

As withered weed through cruell winter's time,

That feelles the warmth of sunny beames' reflection,

Liftes up his head that did before decline,

And 'gins to spread his leafe before the faire sunshine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

Although the conscience be uncertain in the direct act, yet it may be certain, right and determin'd in the reflex and second act of judgment; and if it be it is innocent and safe.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2. R. 3.

In many figures by reflex were sent,

Through this black vault (instructive to the minde)

That early, and this tardy penitent;

For with Obsidian stone 'twas chiefly lin'd.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 6.

Yet, since your light hath once enlumin'd me,

With my reflex yours shall encreased be.—Spenser, son. 66.

Puc. May neuer glorious sunne reflex his beames,

Vpon the countrey where you make abode.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 4.

Reflexion makes the images more dim then direct sight.

More. Antidote against Atheism, b. iii. c. 16.

In general, brute animals are of such a nature as is devoid of that free and reflexive reason which is requisite to acquired art and consultation.—Id. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 13.

The idea of a being absolutely miserable is the idea of a being that sustains the fullest and compleatest torments that are conceivable; and this must be in a knowing, passive, and reflexive subject.

Id. Antidote against Atheism, App. b. v. c. 5.

Whiteness in bodies is but a disposition to reflect all colours of light nearly in the proportion they are mixt in the original rays; as, on the contrary, blackness is only a disposition to absorb or stifle, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on bodies.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

The briny deep,

Seen from some pointed promontory's top,

Far to the blue horizon's utmost verge,

Restless, reflects a floating gleam.—Thomson. Summer.

When light passes through such bodies, it finds at the very entrance of them such resistences where it passes, as serve it for a reflecting body, and yet such a reflectent body, as hinders not the passage through, but only from being a straight line with the line incident.—Digby. On Bodies, c. 13.

In vain the sight, dejected to the ground,
Stoops for relief; thence hot ascending steams
And keen reflection pain. Thomson. Summer.

By reflection then, in the following part of this discourse, I would be understood to mean, that notice which the mind takes of its own operations, and the manner of them, by reason whereof there come to be ideas of these operations in the understanding.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 1.

The days were all in this lost labour spent;
And when the weary king gave place to night;
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

For'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess.

Prior. Solomon, b. i.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation.—Boyle. On Colours.

Mind and understanding is as it were a diaphanous and crystalline globe, or a kind of notional world, which hath some reflex image, and correspondent ray, or representation in it, to whatsoever is in the true and real world of being.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 638.

Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible that are differently refrangible.—Cheyne.

As all these rays differ in refrangibility, so do they in reflexibility; that is, in the property of being more easily reflected from certain bodies than from others.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

Ay, but he spoke slightly and reflexively of such a lady. That is, perhaps he treated her without a compliment, and spoke that of her which she had rather a great deal practice than hear or be told of.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

But all pleasure arises from these two sources, the passive sensation and the reflex act.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 16.

— Or what avail'd

Ev'n thine, thou chief of bards, whose mighty mind,
With inward light irradiate, mirror like,
Receiv'd, and to mankind with ray reflex
The sov'reign planter's primal work displayed?

Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

RE-FLOAT, v. See REFLOW. Fr. Réfloter; refloat, an ebb or ebbing of waters, (Cotgrave.)

Of which kind we conceive the main float and refloat of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe as part of the diurnal motion.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 907.

RE-FLOURISH, v. } Lat. Florere; flos, a REFLORESCENCE. } flower.

To have again, to resume, to retake the vigorous or beautiful growth of flowers; to be again in vigour or prosperity; to be again conspicuous, showy.

And lay e're while a holocaust,
From out her ashle womb now teem'd, Revives, refLOURISHES, then vigorous most
When most unactive deem'd,
And though her body die, her fame survives
A secular bird ages of lives.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Notwithstanding the violence of the persecution, there were some that had courage to resist and stand firm; whom God preserved, that there might be still remaining some seed and root for Israel to refLOURISH, and take new life by the influxes of the Holy Spirit.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 421.

— All to refLOURISH, fades;

As in a wheel all sinks to reascend,
Emblems of man who passes not expires.

Young. Complaint, Night 6.

Nor can we, it is apprehended, peruse the account of the flowering rod of Aaron, deposited in the most holy place for a perpetual memorial of the investiture of the priesthood in him and his family, without being led to reflect on the ascertainment of the Melchisedekian priesthood to the person of Christ, by the reflorescence of that mortal part which he drew from the stem of Jesse.—Horne. Works, vol. iv. Disc. 16.

RE-FLOW, v. } A. S. Flow-an, to move, as REFLOWING, n. } water from its spring or REFLUENT. } source.
REFLUENCY. } To move back again, as or source; to move, or glide, or run back; to return (as in flood) in abundance.

Poore nymph, her sorrowes will not let her stay;

Or flies to tell the world her countrie's woe:
Or cares not to come backe, perhaps, as showing
Our teares should make the flood, not her refLOWING.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

They who ponder frequently, how all things sublunary move continually in an interchangeable flowing, and reflorescence, may easily learn not to imbarque their mindes in any earthly delights, never so fairly secured, without expecting adverse revolutions and repeales of those joyes.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 6. s. 2.

Not that I intend to poze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes, refluxes, and the like.

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 2.

If man were out of the world, who were then to search out the causes of the flux and reflux of the sea, and the hidden virtue of the magnet?

More. An Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 12.

When any one blessed spirit rejoices, his joy goes round the whole society; and then all their rejoicings in his joy reflow upon, and swell and multiply it.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

By thus working upon our spirits they can moderate as they please the violence of our passions, which are nothing but the flowings and reflowings of our spirits to and fro from our hearts.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. c. 7.

Then terror seiz'd them, when, with sudden shock,
The reflux billows forc'd them on the rock.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. ii.

There will be disputes among its neighbours, and some of these will prevail at one time, and some at another, in the perpetual flux and reflux of human affairs.

Bolingbroke. The Occasional Writer.

RE-FLUENT. See REFLOW.

RE-FOCILLATE, v. } Fr. Refocillation, re- REFOCILLATION. } fociller, to refresh, revive, recomfort, recreate, or hearten anew. Lat.
Refocillare, (re, and focillare, foculo calorem resti-tuere,) to give or restore warmth by the fire.
Literally—

To warm again.

P. Broth. Marry, sir, some precious cordial, some costly refocillation, a composure comfortable and restorative.

Middleton. A Mad World, my Masters, Act iii.

RE-FORGE, v. } Fr. Reforger, forger, to REFO'RGER. } fabricate.

To form, frame, or fabricate; invent or contrive again or anew; to make over again.

This worde I saie vnto you to truste vnto: The kyngdome of God receiueh none, but suche as be reformed and chaunged according to this paterne.—Udal. Luke, c. 18.

But Christe beyng a newe reforger of the olde lawe, in stede of burnte offreyng, did substitute charitee.

And nyle ghe be confourmyd to this world, but be ghe reformed in newenesse of ghoure witt that ghe preve which is the wille of God good and wel plesyng and perfit.

Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 12.

But oure lyuyng is in heuenes, fro whennys also we abiden the Sanyour oure Lord Iesus Crist which schal reforme the bodi of oure mekenesse that is maad lyk to the bodi of his clerenesse bi the worching bi which he mai also make alle thingis suget to him.—Id. Filipensis, c. 3.

Lordship may not, of king nor emperour,

Reforme a thing which is not reformable.

Chaucer. Jack Upland.

And right so in the same forme,

In flesshe and bloud he shall reforme,

Whan time cometh, the quicke and dede.

Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Wherefore I praye you mounte vp the stayres and beholde the byldyng of the towre; yf it be well I am contente, and yf only thyng be amysse, yt shall be reformed after your deuyse.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 83.

And so as it were to thentent to reforme the state of the common welth, he commaunded the people to assemble before him in the theatre, gathering the senators into the counsell-house, as though he mined to make some ordinance or decree before.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 100.

Winchester. How sayest thou, wilt thou [Bp. Ferrar] be reformable?—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1411. an. 1555.

Deane. Woman, [Eliz. Young] I haue sued for thee indeede, and I promise thee if thou wilt be reformable, my lord will be good vnto thee.—Id. Ib. p. 1877. an. 1588.

Therupon they al promised to trauaile in reformation of the matter, offering themselves in all thynges (were they neuer so difficult) to doe as he would haue them.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 142.

1588

Let them learn to know, that God hath appointed them in pain of eternal damnation, to be subiectes and not superiours, to be ruled, and not to be rulers, to be priuate persons, and not reformers of common causes.

Bp. Gardner. True Obedience. Mic. Wood to the Reader

All which when Talus thoroughly had perfourmed,

Sir Artagall undid the evil fashion,

And wicked customes of that bridge reformed:

Which done, unto his former journey he returned.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

I think the longest time of our worst princes scarce saw many more executions than the short one of our blest reformer.—Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

This comely subordination of degrees we once had, and we had a visible conspicuous church, to whom all other reformists gave the upper hand.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 36.

Humph, says my lord, I'm half afraid

My captain's turn'd a reformed,

That scurvy face I sure should know.

Cotton. Epistle to the Earl of —.

Into the likeness of one of these reformados had he moulded himself so perfectly, observing every trick of their action, as varying the accent, swearing with an emphasis.

B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. 2.

For never head-strong reformation will Rest, till to the extreme opposite it run,

And overrun the mean distrusted still;

As b'ing too near of kin to that men shun.

Daniel. Musiphilus.

If then, by able heads, are understood

Your brother prophets, who reform'd abroad;

Those able heads expound a wiser way,

That their own sheep their shepherd should obey.

But if you mean yourselves are only sound,

That doctrine turns the reformation round,

And all the rest are false reformers found;

Because in sundry points you stand alone,

Not in communion join'd with any one;

And therefore must be all the church, or none.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Although your church be opposite

To ours, as black friars are to white,

In rule and order yet I grant

You are a reformed saint.

Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

This shall certainly be our portion, as well as his, unless we do prevent it by a speedy reformation of our lives.

Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 6.

But where are its sublimer trophies found?

What vice has it subdued? whose heart reclaim'd

By rigour, or whom laugh'd into reform?

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Hence clamours sprang up without doors, and hence, as was perfectly natural, in the moment of anxiety, to procure an adequate and a fit remedy to a practical grievance, a spirit of speculation went forth, and a variety of schemes, founded in visionary and impracticable ideas of reform, were suddenly produced.

Pitt. Speech on Parliamentary Reform, May 7, 1783.

This was a proper time to enter upon the business of a reformation, which every man, who gave himself a moment's time to think, must be satisfied was absolutely necessary.

Id. Ib.

The practical definition of what the popular branch of our legislature was at this day, he took to be precisely this: an assembly freely elected, between whom and the mass of the people there was the closest union and most perfect sympathy. Such a House of Commons it was the purpose of the constitution originally to erect, and such a House of Commons it was the wish of every reformer now to establish.

Id. Ib. April 18, 1785.

RE-FO'RTIFY, v. Fr. Fortifier, to strengthen or make strong; (fortis;) It. Riformicare,—

To strengthen again; to defend or raise means of defence again.

With special capitulation, that neither the Scots nor the French shall re-fortify, nor cause to be re-fortified, in neither of those two places; with the like covenant for our part, if the French deputies do require.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. p. 281.

REFO'SSION. Lat. Fod-ere, fossum, to dig.
Digging up again.

Hence are refossion of graues, torturing of the surviving, worse than many deaths.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

RE-FOUND, v. Fr. Refondre, fondre; Lat.
Fund-ere, to melt.

To melt or reduce to a liquid state again; (to cast anew,—Cotgrave;) to recast.

Perhaps they are all antient bells refounded.

Warton. History of Kiddington p. 8.

Refractory, or refractory,—Lat. Refractarius; breaking, refusing obedience to, resisting, opposing, law or rule, order or authority; having, acting with, a spirit of resistance or disobedience.

Nor can any conversant in letters be ignorant what error is oft times fallen into, by trusting authorities at second hand, and rash collecting, (as it were,) from visual beams refracted through another's eye.

Selden. Pref. to the Poly-Olbion.

The posture as well as the colours themselves of the rainbow be necessary results of the mere matter, and are nothing but the reflexion and refraction of the light of the sun in the round drops of a roid cloud, as Cartesius has admirably demonstrated.—More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c.11.

Who even in heaven so proudly durst contend,
 Whilst flying armies shining fields did fill;
 And though he fall'd in compassing his end,
 Yet here below was refractory still.

Stirling. Domes-day. The tenth Hour.

How sharp hath your censure been of those refractories amongst us that would forego their stations, rather than yield to these harmless impositions.

Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 306.

And 'tis the observation of the noble St. Alban, that that philosophy is built on a few vulgar experiments; and if, upon further inquiry, any were found to refragate, they were to be discharg'd by a distinction.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 19.

In a rainbow there is really nothing without our sight but a roid cloud diversely refracting and reflecting the sunbeams in such an angle.—Cudworth. Intell. System, p. 9.

Nor e'er before did dewy Iris show
 Such faded colours, or so maim'd a bow;
 Unvary'd by the light's refracting beam
 She stoop'd to drink from ocean's briny stream.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

Ev'n now the setting sun and shifting clouds,
 Seen, Greenwich, from thy lovely heights, declare
 How just, how beauteous, the refractive law.

Thomson. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

That religion thus nursed up by politicians might be every way compliant with, and obsequious to their designs, and no way refractory to the same.—Cudworth. Intell. Sys. p. 655.

Our Saviour, when he sees how refractory and perverse they were, in interpreting every thing to the worse, and censuring the ways which Infinite Wisdom thought fittest to reclaim them by, tells them that it was nothing but malice and obstinacy which was the cause of it.

Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 3.

In which last is set down many actions of Culmer's life, his demeanour while he was in the university of Cambridge, and in the country; his refractoriness, impudence, covetousness, unnaturalness, &c.—Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. i.

Whereas the refractoriness of the succeeding Jews hath taught them to devise so many sophistical evasions to elude the texts we speak of, that they now dispute, not only the application of them, but the explication too.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 274.

Always supposing (as I said) there be no contempt or refractoriness expressed towards the governours.

Sharp, vol. ii. Dis. upon Conscience.

Every ray of light, as it comes from the sun, seems a bundle of all these several sorts of rays; and as some of them are more refrangible than others, that is are more turned out of their course in passing from one medium to another, it follows that after such refraction they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 11.

As all these rays differ in refrangibility, so do they in reflexivity; that is, in the property of being more easily reflected from certain bodies than from others.—Id. Ib.

Should you see the rays of the sun reflected from a system of polished planes, and transmitted through a variety of refractive surfaces, collect at last in a burning point, and there by their united action melt down the stubborn metal which resists the chemist's furnace, would you refer the wonderful effect to chance, rather than to an exquisite polish—to an accurate conformation and a just arrangement of the mirrors and the glasses?—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

Rigour and severity were adapted to the rude manners of the first ages of mankind, and were particularly suited to the refractory temper of the Jewish people.

Id. vol. ii. Ser. 23.

To bridle or hold back with a bridle, with the rein; to rein back; generally, to withhold or hold back; to abstain, to retain, to restrain, to forbear.

The refrain or refret of a song. Fr. Refraine d'une ballade. The refret,—burden or down of a ballade, (Cotgrave.)

And if any man gessith himsilff to be religious, and refreyneth not his tunge, but disseyueth his herte, the religioun of him is veyn.—Wiclif. James, c. 1.

If any man among you seme devout, and refrayne not his tonge: but deceaue his own hert, this man's deuocion is in vayne.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

His reson apperceiveth it wel, that it is sinne ayenst the lawe of God, and yet his reson refraineth not his foule delite or talent.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Great honour did hem Deiphebus certaine,
 And fedde hem well, with all that might like,
 But evermo, alas, was his refraigne.

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

But finally he refreyned his displeasure, by the good meanes of the quene.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 100.

So these ii. persons were euer cohibetors and refreinors of the kinges wilfull skope and vnbrideled libertie.

Hall. Hen. VII. an. 18.

Forthy she gave him warning every day
 The love of women not to entertaine;
 A lesson too, too hard for living clay,
 From love in course of nature to refraigne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
 He would not to the seas expose his wife;
 Nor could be wrought his voyage to refrain,
 But sought by arguments to sooth her pain.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

Why did your wary oracles refrain
 To tell what kings, what heroes must be slain,
 And how much blood the blushing earth should stain?

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

Thus, turning tow'ards the two, exclaim'd aloud:
 Say, whither would ye go? your course refrain,
 Unless you breathless mean to press the plain.

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xii.

RE-FRAME, v. See FRAME and REFORM.

To form, frame, make, or fashion—again; to reform.

It [silver spheare] was carried, as they write, by twelve men, vnframed—and reframed in the grand signiour's presence by the maker, who likewise delivered him a booke containyng the mystery of vsing it.

Hakewill. Apologie, b. iii. s. 1.

I shall be content with it as being the very thing I would have, yet without regarding whether he had made it up of the same materials with the former reframed or of fresh stuff.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 2.

Daniel. An Ode.

Beauty, sweete love, is like the morning dew,
 Whose short refresh upon the tender green
 Cheers for a time, but till the sun doth shew;
 And straight 'tis gone, as it had never been.

Id. Son. 47

Through midst thereof a little river rol'd,
 By which there sate a knight with helme unlaste,
 Himselfe refreshing with the liquid cold,
 After his travell long and labours manifold.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Moreover, in lassitudes and extreme colds, oile is a present refreshing and remedie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 4.

Too long I followed have my fond desire,
 And too long panted on the ocean streams,
 Too long refreshment sought amidst the fire,
 Pursu'd those joys which to my soul are blames.

Drummond. Urania.

Wide flies the tedded grain; all in a row
 Advancing broad, or wheeling round the field,
 They spread their breathing harvest to the sun,
 That throws refreshful round a rural smell.

Thomson. Summer.

In order to keep the mind in repair, it is necessary to replace and refreshen those impressions of nature which are continually wearing away.

Reynolds. Notes on Du Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

It is to be remembered that, although the worship of God is the chief end of the institution, yet the refreshment of the lower ranks of mankind by an intermission of their labours is indispensably a secondary object. "Thou shalt rest on the seventh day," said the law, "that the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed."

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray Fortells the fervour of the ensuing day;
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threatened heat.

Waller. Of the Danger of his Majesty.

In him the beauty of the divine image was refulgent, in its original perfection; in all the sons of Adam obscured and marred, in a degree to be scarce discernible.

Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 6.

RE-FUND, v. } Fr. Refonder les despences, to REFUSION. } restore, pay, return, or give back —the costs and damages, (Cotgrave.) Lat. Re- fundere, (re, and fundere,) to pour back, to restore.
To pour back, to restore, to repay.

There are two sorts of avarice: the one is but of a bastard kind, and that is, the rapacious appetite of gain; not for its own sake, but for the pleasure of refunding it immediately through all the channels of pride and luxury.

Cowley. Of Avarice.

As I said before, and the peripateticks observe well, were the humors of the eye tintured with any colour, they would refund that colour upon the object, and so it would not be represented to the soul, as in itself it is.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

— Oh, spare

Thy suppliant people, and receive their prayer!
Brass, gold, and treasures shall the spoil defray,
Two hundred oxen every prince shall pay;
The waste of years refunded in a day.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

It hath been objected to me that this doctrine of the refusion of the soul was very consistent with the belief of a future state of rewards and punishments, in the intermediate space, between death and the resolution of the soul into the to é.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. Note cc.

RE-FURNISH, v. Fr. Fournir, to supply, provide, fit—again.

Udal. Romaines, c. 11.

But a certain gentlewoman then prisoner amongst them hadde presented causes of exceptions or refusals against them.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 843. Table of the French Martyrs.

At last when as the Sarazin perceiv'd
How that straunge sword refus'd to serve his neede,
But, when he stroke most strong, the dint deceiv'd;
He slong it from him; and, devoyd of deed,
Upon him lightly leaping without heed
'Twixt his two mighty armes engrasped fast,
Thinking to overthrowe and downe him tred.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Thus spoken, ready with a proud refuse
Argantes was his proffer'd aid to scorn.
Fairefax. Tasso, b. xii. s. 13.

But every thing that was vile, and refuse, that they [Saul and the people] destroyed utterly.—1 Samuel, xv. 9.

Considering also that they fought not against them, but with the refuse and scattered people of the overthrowen army his father had lost before.—North. Plutarch, p. 207.

But I his graft, of ev'ry weed o'ergrown,
And from our kind, as refuse forth am thrown.
Drayton. Isabel to Rich. II.

Some few others are the only refusers and condemners of this catholick practice.—Bp. Taylor.

The sacred word refusing as a guide,
Slaves they become to luxury and pride.
Waller. On the Fear of God, c. 2.

Ere long her brother may the wanton wed,
And reap the refuse of the Roman's bed.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

A flat refusal on his [their prince's] part reduces them to the melancholy alternative of continuing to submit to one grievance, and to stand exposed to the other danger, or of freeing themselves from both without his consent.

Bolingbroke. Dissertation on Parties, Let. 7.

A refusable, or little thing in one's eye.—Young, Ser. 2.

These things in themselves, without respect to their use in promoting the salvation of men by the propagation of the gospel, were, as we are taught by our Syrophœnician sister, but the fragments and the refuse of the bridegroom's supper.
Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

REFUTE, v. See CONFUTE. Fr. Réfuter; REFUTATION. } It. Refutare; Sp. Refutar; REFUTER. } Lat. Refutare, (re, and the obsolete futare, i. e. fundere,) to pour; and thus, perhaps, literally, refundere, to pour back upon; to reject, to repel, to rebate; and, hence, (met.)—

To rebate, (sc.) the force of argument or reasoning; to repel it; to disprove; to refel; to demonstrate or show to be false.

Then I began to refute that foule error, howbeit my speach did nothing at all preuaile with him; for he could not be perswaded that any soule might remaine without a body.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 60.

Considering which part techeth him the trewe inuocation and worship of God and which cōfirmeth his faith, which reiecteth and refuteth the Iewes and vs casting away God and his gospel as thei did.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, Arg.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 18.

As for the first interpretation, because it is altogether wasted, it nedeth no refutation.

Caluine. Declaration on the Eighty-Seventh Psalm.

And then the law of nations 'gainst her rose,
And reasons brought, that no man could refute.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

It was the question of the rich and precious jewell of England, to which his hardie adversary had never the face to reply. My refuter's forehead is stronger, with a weaker wit.—Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 3.

The objections to them, which atheists commonly make, even that of physical and moral evil, and the supposed unjust distribution of good and evil, which has been made in all ages, and which is now more prevalent than ever, by the joint endeavours of atheist and Christian divines, are easy to be refuted.—Bolingbroke. To M. de Pouilly, Let. 1.

With insolence and impotence of thought,
Instead of racking fancy to refute,
Reform thy manners, and the truth enjoy.
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

REGAIN, v. } Fr. Regagner; It. Riguada- REGAINING, n. } gnare, to gain or win; (A. S. Ge-winnan, ge-wan, gwan, gān, or gain, acquirere, to seek or search for, and, consequentially, to attain or obtain.)

To attain or obtain again; to get or procure again.

I thought here to omit and ouerpasse the regainyng and conquest of the strong toune of Harlew.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 15.

But by degrees, first this, then that regain'd,
The turning tide bears back with flowing chance Unto the Dauphin, all we had attain'd.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

So that he ceased, for a time, to be God, and wanted to be made a God again after his resurrection; which godhead, then obtained, or regained, is to last no longer than his mediatorial kingdom.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 355.

When the sea smil'd, and the winds rag'd no more,
He leaves his father's hospitable lands,
And furrows with his rattling scales the sand
Along the coast; at length the ship regains,
And sails to Tibur and Lavinium's plains.
Wetsted. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

My soul attends thy voice, and banish'd virtue Strives to regain her empire of the mind.
Johnson. Irene, Act v. sc. 4.

Our adversaries sometimes tell us of a throne, a power of judging, a regal authority belonging to the son; and that therefore he is God; and they observe (as they think shrewdly, but in truth very weakly) that the Holy Ghost has therefore none of that title, as having no regal dominion, &c.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 14.

He therefore gave them a king; but such an one as was only his viceroy or deputy, and who on that account was not left to the people's election, as he left his own regality, but was chosen by himself.

anie good worke.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 21. The Church of Rome that now is, &c.

That which restores flesh that was lost consolidates dissolved continuities, incorporates the newly received nourishment, and joyns it continuously with the preexistent parts of flesh and bone; which regenerates and repairs veins consumed or cut off.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 167.

Whence we observe the rarity of such conversions, that though Saul were, yet every blasphemous sinner could not expect to be, called from the depth of sin to regeneracy and salvation.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 686.

Regeneration complete stands in two things, which are, as it were, its true integral parts, the grant made over to the person, and the reception of that grant. The grant once made continues always the same; but the reception may vary because it depends upon the condition of the recipient.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 349.

He is not his own regenerator, or parent, at all, in his new birth; for that would be a solecism in speech, and a contradiction in notion; he is, however, his own renewer, though in part only, and in subordination to the principal agent.

Id. Ib. p. 352.

I am not unwilling to admit, that this short, but very remarkable conversation is fairly interpreted of the gift of the Spirit, and that, when this Spirit is given, there is a new birth, a regeneration; but I say that it is no where determined at what time of life, or under what circumstances, this gift is imparted; nay, the contrary is intimated by comparing it to the blowing of the wind, which in its mode of action is out of the reach of our rules and calculations.

RE/GICIDE, n. } Fr. Régicide; It. Regicida; RE/GICIDE, adj. } Sp. Regicidium.
REGICIDAL. } One who kills, (cædit,) slays, murders a king (regem); the killer, the murderer of a king; the killing, the murder of a king.

And our posterite shalbe reproved as children of home-cides, ye of regicides and prince quellers.
Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

Not therewith satisfied and contented, [he] compassed and accomplished the death and destruction of his naturall prince, and most worthy souereigne lorde, not as a common homicide and bocherly murder, but as a regicide and destroyer of his kyng.—Id. Hen. VI. an. 38.

The regicide villain was apprehended, and command given that no violence should be offer'd him, that he might be reserv'd for the law, and some exquisite torture.
Howell, b. i. Let. 18.

When to his lust Ægysthus gave the rein,
Did fate, or we, th' adulterous act restrain?
Did fate, or we, when great Atreides died,
Urge the bold traitor to the regicide?
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

For it is to be remembered, that when, in the revolutions of the state, the regicides came to take their turn at the scaffold and the gallows, their friends took care to collect and publish their last spiritual meditations.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. p. 136.

One might suspect this regicidal collection to be the spiritual breathings of an enlightened Methodist.—Id. Ib.

I call a commonwealth regicide, which lays it down as a fixed law of nature, and a fundamental right of man, that all government, not being a democracy, is an usurpation. That all kings, as such, are usurpers, and, for being kings, may and ought to be put to death, with their wives, families, and adherents. The commonwealth which acts uniformly upon these principles, and which, after abolishing every festival of religion, chooses the most flagrant act of a murderous regicide treason for a feast of eternal commemoration, and which forces all her people to observe it—this I call regicide by establishment.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 6.

The regiment of the soul over the body is the regiment of the more active part over the more passive, though both making one composition; but the regiment of Almighty God over the world is not as a part of it, or as a form or soul informing it, but as a rector or governor, distinct, separate, and essentially differing from it.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 41.

So far 'tis well: but, with a general cry,
The regiment will rise in mutiny,
The freedom of their fellow-rogue demand,
And, if refus'd, will threaten to disband.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 16.

I heare say that in England we have landlords (nay step-lords I might say) that are become grasiers, and burgesses are become regraters, and some farmers will regrate and buy up all the corne that commeth to the markets, and lay it up in store, and sell it againe at an higher price when they see their time.—Latimer. Ser. before K. Edward, an. 1550.

A proclamation made against regratters, and forestallers, and the words of the statute recited, with the punishment of the offenders.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. ii. King Edward's Journal.

But because the regrators were greedy to seize upon them, he made them cease the sale.—North. Plutarch, p. 972.

Regrating was described by the same statute [5 & 6. Ed. 6.] to be the buying of corn, or other dead victual, in any market, and selling it again in the same market, or within four miles of the place.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 15.

Fanshaw. Pastor Fido, p. 76.

He departs out of this world regretfully.
Greenhill. Art of Embalming, p. 104.

Fight, or fight not, a like reward we claim,
The wretch and hero find their prize the same,
Alike regretted in the dust he lies,
Who yields ignobly or who bravely dies.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

It is a greater and more manly pleasure, which some men take in searching into the nature of these things in the world, than others can take in the most voluptuous enjoyments of them: the one can only satisfy a brutish appetite, while, it may be, something within is very unquiet and troublesome; but the other brings a solid pleasure to the mind without any regret or disturbance from the body.
Stillington. vol. i. Ser. 12.

Tho' grief and fondness in my breast rebel,
When injur'd Thales bids the town farewell,
Yet still my calmer thoughts his choice commend,
I praise the hermit, but regret the friend.
Johnson. London.

RE-GUE'RDON, n. } Fr. Reguerdonner, to REGUE'RDON, v. } regard or reward.

To reward, to recompense, or remunerate; to benefit, in return for some action done, some service performed.

Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton, Knight.

They would have us believe, that amongst these infinite worlds (all of them fortuitously made) there is not one of a thousand or perhaps of ten thousand, that hath such regu- larly, concinnity, and harmony in it, as this world that we chanced to emerge in.—Cudworth. Intell. System, p. 674.

It never was the work of philosophy to assemble multitudes, but to regulate only, and govern them, when they were assembled.—Cowley. Ess. On Avarice.

He [Anaxagoras himself] did not only assert God to be the cause of motion, but also the governour, regulator, and methodizer of the same, for the production of this harmonious system of the world, and therefore του ευ και καλως αιτιας, the cause of well and fit.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 383.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular.
Dryden. Ep. To Mr. Congreve.

Let the French and Italians value themselves on their re-

Id. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

There I the manly race, the parent-hive
Of the mix'd kingdoms, formed into a state
More regularly free. Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

This factitious salt, when I have rightly prepared it, did sundry times shoot into long crystals with points like diamonds, that did emulate native crystal as well in the regularness of shape as in the transparency of the substance.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 530

— Critics would regulate
Our theatres, and whigs reform our state:
Both pretend love, and both (plague rot 'em!) hate.
Dryden. Prologue to the Loyal Brother.

There is another thing that lies at the bottom, that is to say, worldly interest, and dominion, and power, which they hope to compass by such a regulation of matters as they desire.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 10.

— Some say that under force
Of that controlling ordinance they move,
And need not his immediate hand, who first Prescrib'd their course, to regulate it now.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

Nor was the engine he employed to defeat man's restora-

That horrow 'gan the virgin's hart to perse,
And her faire locks up stared stiffe on end,
Hearing him those same bloody lynes reherse.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

It remaineth now to knit up this discourse with a rehearsall of all the operations and effects of the plants before named.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 8.

Let Dryden with new rules our stage refine,
And his great models form by this design:
But where's a second Virgil to rehearse
Our heroes' glories in his epic verse.

Rochester. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

Now take your turns, ye Muses, to rehearse
His friend's complaints; and mighty magic verse.

Id. Virgil, Past. 8.

This practice [the recital of genealogies] has never subsisted within time of memory, nor was much credit due to such rehearsers, who might obtrude fictitious pedigrees, either to please their masters, or to hide the deficiency of their own memories.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

RE-HEAT, v. Fr. Rehaiter, to revive, rejoice, cheer up exceedingly.

But a rich sicke usurere
Would I visite and draw nere
Him would I comfort and rehele

Reiection is then vsed, when wee lay such faultes from vs, as our enemies would charge vs withall.

Wilson. Rhetorique, p. 189.

And th' Romish rites, that with a clearer sight
The wisest thought they justly did reieet,
They after saw that the received light
Not altogether free was from defect.

Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

He left a son called D. Alphonso the Chaste; but the hatred that the noblemen did bear unto his father was the cause of his reiection, being then also very young.

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. ii. p. 60.

For always the weakest part of mankind are the most suspicious; the less they understand things, the more designs they imagine are laid for them, and the best counsels are soonest reiected by them.—Stillington, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Others are impure and profane, reiectionous and reprobate people, to whom God beareth no good will or regard.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 29.

Yet did they to the last stand out in their opposition of him and his gospel, even to the final reiection of their nation.

Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 10.

The reiectors of it, [Revelation,] therefore, would do well to consider the grounds on which they stand; and what account they will be able to give to the great Judge of all the earth at his second coming, for having contributed to that horrid defection which he hath foretold will be then found amongst men.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 13.

REIGLE. } Fr. Reigle, reiglement; Lat.
REIGLEMENT. } Regulare, to regulate, (qv.)
A rule, canon, order; also, a line, square, form, pattern, (Cotgrave.)

In one of the corners next the sea, standeth a flood-gate, to bee drawne vp and let downe through reigles in the side postes, whose mouth is encompassed with a double frith.

Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 105.

For it were a disparagement to the wise providence of God, and a lessening the rare œconomy of the divine government, that he should permit almost all the world, and all reiglements, the varieties of event, and all the changes of kingdoms, and all counsels and deliberations, to be conducted by moral demonstrations, and to be under the power of probabilities, and yet that these should be deceitful and false.—*Bp. Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 6.

— Vlysses smil'd to heare
So base a swaine have any hope, so high a prise t' aspire,
And said, his labors did affect a great and precious hire;
And that the horse Pelides rein'd, no mortal hand could use
But he himself.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

But whom she doth foreshew shall raigne by force,
She tearmes a wolfe, a dragon, or a beare;
A wilfull prince, a rainlesse raging horse.
Mirror for Magistrates, p. 386.

So four fierce horses starting to the race,
Scour through the plains, and lengthen every pace,
Nor reins [retinacula,] nor curbs, nor threatening cries
they fear,
But force along the trembling charioteer.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

Experienc'd Nestor gives his son the reins,
Directs his judgement and his heat restrains.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

Say whence the wild ass wantons o'er the plain,
Sports uncontrol'd, unconscious of the rein.
Warton. Paraphrase on Job, c. 39.

RE-INCE/NSE, v. Lat. Incendere, incensum, to kindle.

To kindle again, or rekindle; to heat again, to rekindle.

— She, whose beams do re-incense
This sacred fire, seems as reserv'd in store
To raise this work. Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

RE-INCFTE, v. Lat. Incitare, to move or urge to, (in, and citare; Gr. Ki-eiv, to move.)

To move or urge again to; to rouse, to animate again; to reanimate, to re-encourage.

The tyrant in the van, though far apart,
He soon espies, while using ev'ry art
To dare the attack, he reincites his band
And makes the last effort.
Lewis. Statius. The Thebaid, b. xii.

RE-INCREASE, v. Lat. Increscere, to grow to.

To grow again to; to augment, to enlarge
again.

— Tho' when they did perceive
Their wounds recur'd, and forces reincreast,
Of that good hermit both they tooke their leave,
And went both on their way, ne ech would other leave.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

RE-INDUCE, v. To lead, draw or bring in,
again.

But now this great succeder all repairs,
And reinduc'd that discontinu'd good;
He builds up strength and greatness for his heirs,
Out of the virtues that adorn'd his blood.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

RE-INFLAME, v. Lat. Inflammaré, (flamma, Gr. φλεγμα, from φλεγειν, to burn.)

To warm, heat, burn—again; to rekindle.

Make fat with frankincense the sacred fires,
To re-inflame my Daphnis with desires.
Dryden. Virgil. Past. 8.

RE-INFORM, v. Low Lat. Informare.

To present again to, to impress again upon, the mind, the form, the idea of a thing; to give or convey again ideas, knowledge: generally, to instruct, to furnish, to provide again with.

That is, to collect their dispersed dust which had been blown about upon the wings of the wind, in order to their being reintegrated into humane bodies, and reformed with their primitive souls.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

RE-INGRATiate, v. To bring into favour,
(in gratiam.)

To introduce or bring again into, to gain or obtain again, favour, good will, kindness.

Turkill, who upon the arrivall of these Danish powers kept faith no longer with the English, but joining now with Canute, as it were to reingratiate himself after his revolt, whether real or complotted, counsel'd him (being yet young) not to land, but to leave to him the management of this first battel.—Milton. History of England, b. vi.

RE-INHABIT, v. Lat. Inhabitare, (in, and habitare, from habere, to have or hold.)

To have, hold, or keep again; to dwell again in.

Towns and cities were not reinkhabited, but lay ruin'd and waste; nor was it long ere domestic war breaking out, wasted them more.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. iii.

REINS. Fr. Reins; It. Rèni; Sp. Renes; Lat. Renes, from Gr. Pe-eiv, to flow; quod serous humor per renes decurrat.

— And in such point
She hath my wounded herte anoite,
My temples, and my reynes also.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And now by force dragg'd from the monkish cell,
Where teeth he only us'd, nor hands, nor brains,
But in smooth streams swam down through ease to hell;
His work to eat, drink, sleep, and purge his reins.
Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 9.

All living creatures are fattest about the raines of the backe.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

RE-INSPIRE, v. Lat. Inspirare, to breathe into, (re, and inspirare; A. S. Spir-ian, to breathe.)

To breathe again into; to animate again, to reanimate, to revive; to give, grant, or bestow again, breath, life, the spirit.

— Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius reinspire
The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
The lilly and rose, that neither sow'd nor spun.
Milton. Sonnet to Lawrence.

The knight and hungry mastiffs stood around,
The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground;
When on a sudden, reinspir'd with breath,
Again she rose, again to suffer death.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

No furies were at hand to reinspire
Heroic thoughts, and wake their dormant fire.
Lewis. Statius. The Thebaid, b. v.

Both bodies found, they raise a gladsome cry,
(The sign agreed,) and to the weight apply
Their shoulders; pleas'd, as if preserv'd from death,
Each corse was re-inspir'd with vital breath.—Id. Ib. b. x.

RE-INSTA'L, v. Bar. Lat. Installare; Lat.
Stabulum, locus ubi status, (Skinner.)

To replace or place again in a station or situation.

For though that seat of earthly bliss be fall'd,
A fairer paradise is founded now
For Adam and his chosen sons, whom thou
A Saviour art come down to re-install.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Wert thou some star which from the ruin'd roof
Of shak'd Olympus by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove in nature's true behoof Took up, and in fit place did reinstall?—Id. Ode 7.

RE-INSTA'TE, v. } Lat. Status, (from stare, RE-INSTA'TEMENT. } to stand,) the place, the condition, in which any one stands.

To put or place again in; to put again in, to invest again with, to restore.

For the just we have said already, that some of them were reinstated in their pristine happiness and felicitie.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

To-day is yesterday return'd; return'd
Full power'd to cancel, expiate, raise, adorn,
And reinstate us on the rock of peace.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

The second advent is the season when his glory and majesty will be openly manifested to the whole world, and the Jews visibly reinstated in his favour.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 6.

The same prophecies that threatened the expulsion maintain the continuance of the husband's property in the separated woman, and promise a reconciliation and final reinstatement of her in her husband's favour.—Id. Ib.

RE-INSTRU'CT, v. Lat. Instruere, instructum, to build upon, (in, and struere, to build.)

To rebuild; to form, to furnish, to provide again, (sc. with knowledge or learning;) to learn, to teach again.

The Galatians might be begotten again to St. Paul, because that meant no more than the being restructured in the faith and reclaimed in manners.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 364.

RE-INTEGRATE. See REDINTEGRATE.

RE-INTE'R, v. To put or place; to lay again in the earth, (in terrâ,) to bury again, to rebury.

There where they are most without mixture, is Tiberias in Palestine, which Amurath gave Mendez the Jew, whither, and to Jerusalem, upon any convenience, they convey the bones of their dead friends from all places to be rein-terr'd.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 8.

RE-INTICE, v. To allure, to tempt, again.

And from the smith of heauen's wife
Allure the amorous haunt,
And reintise the club-god Dys
And all his diuelles to daunt.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 26.

RE-INVE'ST, v. Lat. Investire, indere vestem, to put on a vest or covering.

To cover, to clothe again; to put again into possession; to repossess, to reoccupy.

Passing through the condition of being re-invested with his fiery vehicle.—More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, c. 3.

Think that they [thy friends] shroud thee up, and think from thence,
They re-invest thee in white innocence.
Donne. Funeral Elegies.

In the midst of a populous and mutinous city, this great king had some good subjects, persons that threw away their own garments and laid them at the feet of our Lord, that being divested of their own they might be re-invested with a robe of his righteousness.—Bp. Taylor. Gt. Exemplar, pt. iii.

RE-INVOLVE, v. To roll in, to enfold, to enwrap, to close or surround, again.

O let them not bring about their damned designs, that stand now at the entrance of the bottomless pit, expecting the watch-word to open and let out those dreadful locusts and scorpions, to re-involve us in the pitchy cloud of infernal darkness.—Milton. Of Reformation in England.

RE-JOIN, v. } Fr. Joindre, rejoindre; Lat.
REJOINDER, v. } Jung-ere, to put, place, or REJOINDER, n. } bring together.

REJOINT, n. } To unite, add (sc. one thing to another) again, to; to combine, to connect together again; to come together, to associate, again; to add, (sc. something in answer or reply;) to give a second or an additional answer,—an answer or reply.

REJ

In law,—an answer to a reply; the order is, plea, replication, rejoinder, rebutter.

But most of all we have herein to wonder at maister Harding, in his late rejoinder written against the bishop of Salisbury.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1766. an. 1556.

They haue declarations, barres, replications, and rejoinders, only they lacke pleasaunt fourme of begynnyng, called in Latine exordium.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 14.

The young tendrons or springs of the wild olive, being boiled and laid too with honey, do rejoyne and reunite the skin of the head which was departed from the bones of the skull.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 4.

— A short space seuers ye Compar'd unto that long eternitie,
That shall re-joyne ye.—B. Jonson. Elegie on my Muse.

When the axe that was carried about the wood, threatening all indifferently, shall be laid to the root of the tree; when Nathan shall rejoinder with a Thou art the man, 1 Cor. vi. 11, then their hearts come to the touchstone.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 604.

Yet, lady, still remember I maintain,
The word in needful points is only plain.—
Needless, or needful, I not now contend,
For still you have a loophole for a friend,
Rejoind the matron.—Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Rejoinder to the churl the king disdain'd;
But shook his head, and rising wrath restrain'd.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

Ezekiel saw dry bones rejoynted and re-inspired with life.
Barrow. Resurrection of the Body or Flesh.

And pain and pleasure e'er shall be,
As Plato says, in company.
Receive the one, and soon the other Will follow to rejoin his brother.—Cooper. Terpsichore.

RE-JOLT, n. See in v. RECOIL, the quotation from South.

A shake or shock again—back again.

RE-JOURN, v. } See ADJOURN, and JOURNEY.
REJOURNMENT. } Fr. Jour, adjourner, to put back, to put off, to another day.

To postpone, to put off to a future day; to delay, to defer, to discontinue.

Concerning mine own estate, I am right sorry that my coming to Venice is rejournd a month or two longer.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 702.

To whose divine treatises, and to the Scriptures themselves, I rejourne all such atheistical spirits, as Tully did Atticus, doubting of his point, to Plato's Phædon.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 27.

The Prætors being his judges, and favouring Verres, had made so many rejourments and delays, that they had driven it off to the last day of hearing.—North. Plutarch, p. 713.

RE-JOY, v. } Fr. Réjouir, resjouir, res-
REJOICE, v. } jouissant; Sp. Regocijar, re-

— No book bote here conscience
Noth^r. riches bote the rode. to rejoyesen hem inne.
Piers Plouhman, p. 296.

Som tyraunt is, as ther ben many on,
That hath an herte as hard as any ston,
Which wold han lette him sterven in the place
Wel rather than han granted him hire grace:
And hem rejoycen in hir cruel pride,
And rekken not to ben an homicide.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9867.

Rise, let vs speake of lustie life in Troy
That we have lad, and forth the time drive,
And eke of time coming vs rejoy,
That bringen shall our blisse.—Id. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

What? brid, quod Phœbus, what singest thou now?
Ne were thou wont so merily to sing,
That to my herte it was a rejoycing
To here thy vois? alas! what song is this?
Id. The Manciples Tale, v. 17, 194.

And so there whyle I me reioie
Unto my herte a great desyre,
The whiche is hotter than the fire,
All sodenliche vpon me renneth.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

If these had neuer entred wo,
How mought they have reioised so?
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer thinkes no paine to great.

What hope is left us then, what comfort doth remayne,
Our quiet herts for to rejoyce with the frute of our payne.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 2.

REJ

Ne may foresight of man such order geve in lyef,
For to foreknow, who shall rejoyce their gotten good with stryef.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 2.

Whē he had red it ouer, he rehersed it again in the open assembly of hys souldiers, to the great cōfort and reioycement of them all.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 138.

Which he perceiving, greatly 'gan rejoyce,
And goodly counsell, that for wounded hart
Is meetest med'cine, tempred with sweete voice.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

But chiefly then, when any nobler occasion invited the rejoycer's expressions.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 137.

Parsons rejoycingly relateth, out of Walsingham, the answer of king Henry the third of England to king Lewis of France, called the saint.—Sheldon. Mir. of Antichr. p. 263.

Since God is the king of all the world, and such a king likewise that the measures of his government are exact goodness, and wisdom, and righteousness; what have all mankind to do, especially good men, but to rejoyce and be glad?—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 13.

— While to her voice
Ten thousand hierarchies of angels harp
Symphonious, and with dulcet harmonies
Usher the song rejoicing.
Mason. Musæus.

We rejoyce at the fortunate event which has made another happy; we are glad to hear of their success, are happy to be informed of their welfare.

Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. s. 3.

REIT. See REED. Pliny seems to mean the reedy substances.

This is the onely fish that buildeth upon the reites and mosse of the sea, and laith her eggs, or spawneth in her nest.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 26.

RE-ITERATE, v. } It. Reiterare; Lat.
REITERATION. } Iterare, iter repetere, to REITERATEDLY. } repeat a journey, to go over again.

To go over again and again; to do any thing again and again; to repeat often; to repeat
again.

This is agreed, and by the Scriptures playnelie taught, that the oblation and sacrifice of our Sauour Christe was and is a perfite worke ones consummate in perfection without necessitie of reiteration, as it was neuer taught to be reiterate, but a mere blasphemie to presuppose it.
Bp. Gardner. Explic. of the true Cath. Faith, fol. 145.

You deceive your selues in the word reiteration: for we doe not reiterate it so as you thinke, as by example I will shew.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 842. Table of the French Martyrs.

As I have observed once for all in the booke immediately going before, because I would not willingly reiterate and inculcate one thing often.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 21.

This would be reiterated often, untill such time as it be brought to looke like unto minium.—Id. Ib. b. xxxiv. c. 10.

It is very likely that most readers will not be able, or perhaps willing, to reiterate such trials.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 470.

Even eucharistical remission, and eucharistical graces, by the same principle, can be only baptismal remission and baptismal graces continued or reiterated.
Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 484.

It is to be observed that the stream, not of blood alone, but of water with the blood, was something preternatural and miraculous; for St. John dwells upon it with earnest reiterated asservation, as a thing so wonderful that the explicit testimony of an eye-witness was requisite to make it credible; and yet of great importance to be accredited as a main foundation of faith.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 9.

They had been reiteratedly told, that their sole hope of peace was the very contrary to what they naturally imagined.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

RE-JUDGE, v. To judge, jus dicere,—to declare what is just.

To judge, deem, or doom again; to pass sentence or judgment upon a sentence or judgment.

Snatch'd from his hand the balance and the rod,
Rejudge his justice, be the god of God.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 1.

RE-JUVENE/SCENCE. } Lat. Juvenilis,— REJUENE/SCENCY. } young, youthful.
A restoration to youth; reinstatement of youth.

The whole creation, now grown old, expecteth and waiteth for a certain rejuvenescency.—Smith. On Old Age, p. 264.

I may possibly send you a consideration, whether Paracelsus and others deservedly call such accidents, as the above-mentioned change of nails, hair, and even of teeth, a real renovation or rejuvenescence.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 148.

REL

I am very far from being what a healthy man would call well. That degree of health I give up entirely; I might as well expect rejuvenescence.
Chesterfield. Miscellaneous Works, vol. iv. Let. 33.

RE-KINDLE, v. To light or set fire again to; to heat, to inflame again; to re-incense, to re-inflame.

A shining piece of wood, deprived in our engine of light, would yet retain a disposition to be, as it were, re-kindled upon the fresh access of the air.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 165.

Does not this wise philosopher assert
The radiant sun's extinguish'd every night,
And every morn, rekindled, darts his light?
Blackmore. Creation, b. iv.

Straight her rekindling eyes resume their fire,
The Virtues smile, the Muses tune the lyre.
Thomson. To the Prince of Wales.

RE-KING, v. To make king again.

You hassard lesse, rekinging him,
Then I vn-king'd to bee,
And danger ouer-dares, if it
From iustice disagree.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

RE-KNOWLEDGE, v. To knowledge or acknowledge; own, confess, or profess a knowledge of.

But in that you have reknowned Jesus Criste the autor of saluacion.—Udal. John, c. 2.

RE-LAND, v. To land or bring, bear to, set or place upon, land again.

In order to obtain the bounty or drawback, the goods, it is well known, are sometimes shipped and sent to sea, but soon afterwards clandestinely relanded in some other part of the country.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

RE-LAPSE, v. } Lat. Labi, lapsus, to RELA'PSE, n. } fall.
RELA'PSE, n. } To fall back again; to slide, or glide, or pass back; to fail; to lose (ground, progress) any thing gained or made.

You promised by oth vpon the Euangelists, euer after to believe and hold as the Christian faith taught and preached, and neuer to offend againe in the same heresies, or any other, vpon pain of relapse.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 745. an. 1518.

This Panormitane as he was subtle, so did he subtly dispute against the last conclusions, indeuouring himselfe to declare that Eugenius was not relapsed, and had great contention with ye bishop of Argens, John Segonius, and Frances de Fure, diuines.—Id. Ib. p. 615. an. 1431.

He [Henry III.] commanded them all in publike to renew the said sentence against all contradictors of the sayd charter, so that if he himselfe, through any conceived rancor, had not peradventure observed it, he might more grievously relapse into the said denounced sentence.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. ii. p. 36.

— I am now so well recover'd
From all m' inquietudes, that for the future
I dare defy the malice of my stars
To cause a new relapse into distemper.
Tuke. The Adventures of five Hours, Act v.

Of indignation lastly, at those speculative relapsers that have, out of policy or guiltinesse, abandoned a knowne and received truth.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

It then remains, that church can only be
The guide which owns unfailing certainty,
Or else you slip your hold, and change your side,
Relapsing from a necessary guide.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

If they afterwards turn to God with true faith and repentance, then they enter into the justified state, and so continue all along unless they relapse.
Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 464.

When evil habits have much and long prevailed, repentance, however sincere, will hardly be completed at once but the ordinary method is to repent again and again, after every relapse, till by degrees a man gains the entire mastery over his appetites and passions.—Id. Ib. vol. vii. p. 257

Now the distemper, spite of draught or pill,
Victorious seem'd, and now the doctor's skill;
And now—alas for unforeseen mishaps!
They put on a damp nightcap, and relapse;
They thought they must have died, they were so bad
Their peevish hearers almost wish they had.
Cowper. Conversation.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Island Princess, Act i. sc. 1.

Nor was any before him [Julius Cæsar] of his country that knew or meddled in relation of us.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

The corporeal world was to be explained by these two things, whereof one is absolute in the bodies without us, the various mechanism of them, the other relative only to us, the different phancies in us, caused by the respective differences of them in themselves.—Cudworth. Intell. Syst. p. 29.

As bodies are considered relatively to us, that so besides their different modifications and mechanical alterations, there are also different phancies, seemings, and apparitions begotten in us from them.—Id. Ib. p. 33.

Truth she relates in a sublimer strain Than all the tales the boldest Greeks could feign.

Waller. Of Divine Poesy, c. 2.

Now if this innocent [Archemorus] had been of any relation to his Thebais, if he had either furthered or hindered the taking of the town, the poet might have found some sorry excuse at least for the detaining the reader from the promised siege.—Dryden. Æneis, Ded.

Our friends and relatives stand weeping by, Dissolv'd in tears to see us die, And plunge into the deep abyss of wide eternity.

Pomfret. A Prospect of Death.

Those writers considered the light, not only as breaking forth, or streaming out from the Father absolutely, (as they considered it who illustrated eternal generation thereby,) but also relatively, in respect of the creatures; upon whom it began to break forth and shine when the Son exerted his power in the creation.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 294.

A mineralist of great veracity hath several times assured me that a known person in the relator's country, the Netherlands, got a great deal of money by the way of extracting a blue tincture out of copper, so as to leave the body white.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 96.

When the mind so considers one thing that it does, as it were, bring it to, and set it by another, and carry its view from one to t'other; this is, as the words import, relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, and serving as marks to lead the thoughts beyond the subject itself denominated, to something distinct from it, are what we call relatives; and the things so brought together related.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 25.

The most universal public relation, by which men are collected together, is that of government, namely, as governors and governed, or, in other words, as magistrates and people.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

Friends as ye are, and near relations too, To us for succour, not in vain ye sue.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. ii.

They have been too long used to the natives to find any novelty in their concerns, and perhaps have been induced to regard them with that partiality of long acquaintance or of relationship which precludes malevolence.

Knox. Essays, No. 166.

Relative has, indeed, within my memory, by a ridiculous affectation of false and unfounded accuracy, crept into improper use, to the exclusion of relation.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 8.

Relative rights of persons are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 1.

The statute 9 Ann. c. 20, permits an information in nature of quo warranto to be brought with leave of the Court, at the relation of any person desiring to prosecute the same (who is then styled the relator) against any person usurping, intruding into, or unlawfully holding any franchise or office in any city.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 17.

RE-LAX, v. Fr. Relascher; It. Rilassare, rilasciare; Sp. Relaxar; Lat. Relaxare, (re, and laxare, to loose, Goth. Laus-yan, A. S. Les-an;) to loosen, to slacken; RELAXATION. RELAXATIVE. RELAXING, n. to remit the tightness; to release, (qv.)

To remit—the tightness, the fastness, the constraint; to slacken, to loosen; to remit, or rebate, or abate, the rigour, the force, the strength; and, consequentially, to unstring, to weaken.

For of suche sorte ought the pastime and relaxation of suche menne as are followers of the apostles to be.

Udal. Luke, c. 9.

— But now

Foule dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout, Nor serv'd it to relax thir serried files.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The motion and activity of the body consisteth chiefly in the sinews, which, when the southern wind bloweth, are more relax.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 381.

'Tis not denied but labours and cares may have their relaxes and recreations.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 58.

But equity, that bears an even rein Upon the present courses, holds in awe By giving hand a little; and doth gain, By a gentle relaxation of the law.

Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton, Knt.

You must use relaxatives.—B. Jonson. Magnetic Lady.

As destroying one [civil penalties] is destroying the civil peace and safety, so the destroying or relaxing of the other [motives of future sanctions] is so far destroying or relaxing virtue and morality.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 168.

From that great hour the war's whole fortune turns, Pallas assists, and lofty Iliion burns; Not till that day shall Jove relax his rage, Nor one of all the heavenly host engage In aid of Greece.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

How, saith Ambrose, can any one dare to reckon the Holy Ghost among creatures? or who doth so render himself obnoxious that if he derogate from a creature, he may not suppose it to be relaxable to him by some pardon?

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 34.

I mention it now only to show what the author is aiming at, namely, abatements and relaxations of the laws of Christ, to make them suit the better with corrupt nature.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 25.

We have all of us some idea of justice, yet are perpetually doubtful whether particular actions coincide therewith or not; and no man can fix so perfect an idea of that virtue as that he may not afterwards find reason to add or relax therefrom.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 24.

But relaxation of the languid frame, By soft recumbency of outstretch'd limbs, Was bliss reserv'd for happier days.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

RE-LAY. Fr. Relayer, relais. Cotgrave well explains,—

“Chevaux de relais,—horses layed in certain places on the high way for the more haste making, or for the ease of those one hath already rid hard.

“Chiens de relais,—dogs laid for a back set; such as are held by the side of a long course, to be hounded after a deer already pursued by other dogs.”

A relay of ground, is ground laid up in fallow; generally,—any thing laid up, stored up; a store, a reserve.

There ouertooke I a great rout Of hunters and eke forresters, And many relays and limers.—Chaucer. The Dreame.

Cheer'd as the woods (where new wak'd quires they meet) Are all, and now dispose their choice relays Of horse and hounds, each like each other fleet.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 2.

— Who call aloud

or every bawble drivell'd o'er by sense; For rattles, and conceits of every cast, For change of follies, and relays of joy, To drag your patient through the tedious length Of a short winter's day.—Young. Complaint, Night 2.

RE-LEASE, v. Fr. Relaisser, re, and laisser, to loose; (Goth. Laus-yan, A. S. Les-an;) sc. from RELAXATIVE. RELAXING, n. hold or possession, from restraint.

To remise or remit; to loosen or set loose or free; to free from restraint or confinement; to acquit, quit, or give an acquittance; generally,—to free, liberate, or discharge, (to relax, qv.)

Bot if thei wille with pes this lond geld vs alle quite, Thei salle than haf reles, of fayth gode respite.

R. Brunne, p. 185.

Hit ys synne as of sevene. non soner relesede.

Piers Plouhman, p. 41.

But ther as ye han profred me to-day To chesen me a wif, I you relesed That chois, and pray you of that profer cese.

And thus come out the treacherie Which vnder false hypocrisie Was hid, and thei that wened peace Tho' mighten finde no release Of thilke swerde, which all deuoureth.—Id. Ib. b. i.

If you can procure our masters to send the king of Spaine his letters for our releasement, you should do vs great good. Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 247.

He slips aside; the whiles that furious beast [unicorn] His precious horne; sought of his enimyes, Strikes in the stocke, ne thence can be releast, But to the mighty victor yields a bounteous feast.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

And so fell after into discontent, He would not at their suit consent To work their cousin Mortimer's release Out of the rebel Owen Glendour's hands.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

He [Ethelbald, king of Mercland] discharged all monasteries and churches of all kind of taxes, works, and imposts, excepting such as were for building of forts and bridges, being (as it seems the law was then) not releasable.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

So I may say, I am but a prisoner still, notwithstanding the releasement of so many.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 31.

Passamont i' the name of all the rest, Bowing his body, as became him best, “Honour'd releaser,” said, “Command what is Feasible.”

Gayton. On Don Quixote, p. 125.

For the punishment to which we are obliged by the law of grace, consists in the loss of heaven, as well as in the positive torments of hell, and therefore our pardon must include a release from both.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

When now three portions of the day were spent, And weary hinds at evening homeward went, The chief had till'd four acres of the soil; He then releas'd the monsters from their toil.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. iii.

Releases are a discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that hath some former estate in possession. The words generally used therein are “remised, released, and for ever quit-claimed.”

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

There must be a privity of estate between the releasor and the releassee.—Id. Ib.

or relative.

Relevancy, as in the quotation from Burnet, is of Scotch rather than of English usage.

Having shewed you that we differ about the meaning of Scripture, and are like to do so, certainly there ought to be a rule, or a judge, between us, to determine our differences, or, at least, to make our probations and arguments relevant.
King Charles. Letter to A. Henderson. Papers, &c. p. 55.

The most probable appears to be—a religando; the word religio seeming emphatically to express the reciprocal bond or obligation of man to man, and also the obligation or duty of man to the gods, in heathen times, and to God among Christians.
Religion, as in common usage, may be said to express, generally—

An acknowledgment of our bond or obligation as created beings to God, our Creator; a consequent return of duty and obedience;—godliness, holiness, piety towards God; reverence towards him, and to things sacred or consecrated to him;
a strict and conscientious discharge or observance of our duties or obligations to each other, as fellow-creatures, or creatures of the same God.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

The truth is, he [Whittingham] could not abide any thing that appertained to a goodly religiousness or monastical life.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

The first requisite in religion is seriousness: no impression can be made without it. An orderly life, so far as others are able to observe us, is now and then produced by prudential motives, or by dint of habit; but without seriousness there can be no religious principle at the bottom, no course of conduct from religious motives; in a word there can be no religion.—Paley, Ser. 1.

Our English translators among the rest, in innumerable instances, for the original Jehovah, which ought upon all occasions to have been religiously retained, have put the more general title of the Lord.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 30.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 110.

So well and so thoroughly ripen'd they [figges] bee with the heat of the sun, notwithstanding the leaves be betweene, that they yeeld a most pleasant and sweet relice in tast.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 5.

On which with eager appetite they dine,

A savoury bit, that served to relish wine.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

The fruits of liberty have the more agreeable relish after the uneasy hours of a close and tedious confinement.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 459.

We do not always find equal relish in the same enjoyment, nor does the prospect of it always appear in colours equally vivid.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

RE-LIVE, v. To revive, to recreate; to live, create, or cause to live—again.

Neither coule they yet conceyue in mind the mistery of ye crosse, nor gesse for what purpose he would be slaine, if he would soon after his death reliue agayne, sith that he who can reliue when hym lust, can also, if it please hym, not dye at all.—Udal. Paraphrase on Mark, c. 9.

As the angels of God in heauen, because there is among the no mortalitie, know not the use of matrimony; so shal they that shal be reliued in the general resurrection, be made lyke vnto the angels.—Id. Ib. c. 12.

For I will reliue as I sayd on the third day, & being reliued, will goe before you into Galile.—Id. Ib. c. 13.

And, with it ronning hastily to her sonne,

Thought with that sight him much to have reliv'd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

His mother swowned thrise, and the third time

Could scarce recovered be out of her paine;

Had she not bene deuide of mortall slime

She should not then have bene relyv'd againe.

Id. Ib. c. 4.

RE-LOAD, v. To load again.

It is impossible for them to reload as the animal is seldom at more than twelve or fifteen yards distance, when he is fired at: so that if he does not fall, they immediately put themselves in a posture to receive him upon their spears.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 5.

RE-LONGED. See REJOURNED.

Prolonged; postponed.

Then the kyng sent to Parys, commaundyng that the journey and batayle between the squyer and ye knyght sholde be relonged tyl his comynge to Parys, and so his commaundment was obeyed.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 61.

For the more surete, I thynke it were good, that the trefce were relonged unto the feste of Saint John Baptist next following.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 212.

RE-LU'CENT. See LUCID. Fr. Reluire, reluisant; It. Rilucere, rilucente; Lat. Relucens, present part. of relucere, (re, and lucere, to shine.)

Throwing back a light, a brilliancy; giving or yielding a brightness, or brilliancy, or splendour; brilliant, splendid, shining, resplendent.

There is no best sauage

Ne no tygre so wood

But she wold change his mood,

Such reluent grace

Is form'd in her face.—Skelton. Boke of Philip Sparow.

— By thee refin'd,

In brighter mazes the relucent stream

Plays o'er the mead.

Thomson. Summer.

Joy fill'd the breast of Idmon, to behold,

How from the thighs the flames relucent roll'd

In purple volumes and propitious smoke.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. i.

RELUCT, v.

RELUCTANT.

RELUCTANCE.

RELUCTANCY.

RELUCTANTLY.

RELUCTATION.

Fr. Relucter; Lat. Reluctari;

to struggle or strive against.

Struggling, striving against,

resisting, opposing, contending against; unwilling, lingering, loitering; (generally)

acting with unwillingness, with regret; and hence the apparently harsh usage of the noun by Wood, as equivalent to regret.

He was by nature passionate, but more apt to reluct at the excesses of it.—Walton. Life of Donne.

So spake the sovran voice, and clouds began

To darken all the hill, and smook to rowl

In dusky wreathes, reluctant flames, the signe

Of wrauth awak'd.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

He who suffers want without reluctancie, may be poore not miserable.—Habington. Castara, pt. iii. A Holy Man.

Neither did Adam's sin, or the curse upon it, deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a rebellion or reluctation.—Bacon. Of an Holy War.

Iag. I have done as many villanies as another,

And with as little reluctation.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Pilgrim, Act ii. sc. 2.

Ros. Use 'em with all the austerity that may be,

They are our slaves; turn all those pitties,

Those tender reluctations that should become your sex

To stern anger.—Id. The Sea Voyage, Act iv. sc. 1.

But what! am I fallen again into a new reluctation? Have I before contested with thy justice, and shall I now dispute thy power?—Reliquiae Wottonianæ, p. 266.

[It cannot be understood that senseless matter] hath αποκαρδοκιαν, an earnest expectation of some future good to itself; that it is now made subject ματαιοτητι, to vanity, frustration and disappointment of desire, and φθορα, to corruption and death; and that ουχ εκουσα, not willingly, but reluctantly.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 866.

For the holy spirit moves and inclines only, and does not compel; he leads and conducts as many as will be led and conducted by him; but does not so forcibly attract them as to overrule all stubborn resistance or reluctant perverseness.

Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 330.

Mark! how with feign'd alacrity he bears

His strong reluctance down, his dark revenge,

And gives the charter, by which life indeed

Becomes of price, a glory to be man.

Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

Retiring to his relations then living in the city of Hereford, James Scudamore was drown'd in the river adjoining, (to the great reluctancy of all those who were acquainted with his pregnant parts.)

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. an. 1666.

The most unnatural rebellion broke out to the great horror and reluctancy of all good men.—Id. Ib. an. 1667.

Lay we aside all inveterate prejudices and stubborn reluctances, as soon as ever we have light enough to see that we have been in an error, and that we ought to retract.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 383.

Well, says I, since it must be so, here is my arm; but I go half reluctantly, for I like this place so well I could be content to live here always.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

— Trust me, tho' I bid thee strike,

Reluctantly I bid thee, for my soul

Holds dear an ancient oak, nothing more dear;

It is an ancient friend.—Mason. English Garden, b. i.

RE-LUME, v. See LUMINE. Fr. Rallumer.

To light, kindle, inflame or set on fire again, (Cotgrave.)

— But once put out thy light,

Thou cunning'st patterne of excelling nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heate

That can thy light relume.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act v. sc. 2.

[This noble theory—that the sun was in the centre of its system, and that all the other bodies moved round it, in perpetual revolutions] suffered a total eclipse throughout a long succession of learned and unlearned ages; till these times relumed its ancient splendour, and immoveably fixed it on the most unerring principles of science.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 3.

RELY, v. } Skinner says—from re, and lye,

RELI'ANCE. } or the Fr. Relier, (religare,) to RELY'ER. } bind up. To rely seems equivalent to requiescere, reponere, to rest or repose upon.

To rest or repose in or upon; to depend upon, (sc.) with trust or confidence; to trust or confide in.

In spite of fate they'll give their foe the worse,

On their own valour they so much rely.

Drayton. Miseries of Queen Margaret.

False hope, ah! whither now so speedy hiest?

In vain thy winged feet so fast thou pliest,

Hope thou art dead, and joy, in hope relying,

Bleeds in his hopeless wounds, and in his death lies dying.—Fletcher. Eliza, an Elegy.

— I must serue my turne

Out of mine own, his dayes and times are past,

And my reliance is on his fracted dates

Haue smit my credit.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act ii. sc. 1.

REM

To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash reliev.

Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Petrus. My means and my conditions are no shamers
Of him that owes 'em, all the world knows that,
And my friends no reliers on my fortunes.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Tamer Tam'd, Act i. sc. 3.

And he, when want requires, is truly wise,
Who slights not foreign aid, nor overbuys;
But on our native strength in time of need relies.

Dryden. Ep. To John Dryden of Chesterton.

The Saviour, effecting every thing by his power, is represented under the image of a great champion in the field, who is prompted by his own courage, and a reliance on his own strength and skill, to attempt what might seem impracticable.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 6.

REMAIN, v. Fr. Remaindre; It. Rimane; REMAIN, n. Lat. Remanere, (re, and manere, Gr. Mēv-eiv, to stay, to abide;) to stay, to be left, behind.

R. Brunne, p. 16.

And now is time to you for to telle,
How that we baren us that ilke night
When we were in that hostelrye alight.
And after wol I tell of our viage,
And all the remenant of our pilgrimage.—Chaucer. Prol.

My herte was peersed with very compassion,
That in me remayned no life of nature.
Id. The Lament of Mary Magdalen.

— To whom wilt thou me leaue,
Ready to dye, my swete guest? sithe this name
Is all as now that of a spouse remaines.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

After my wil my sorow to redoub,
Troy, and the remainder of our folke,
Restore I shold.
Id. Ib.

O Queene that in our woes (alone) such mercy dost extende
To vs the poore remain of Troy.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. i.

Our sins and our sinfulness too must be taken away; that is, our old guilt, and the remanent affections must be taken off, before we are friends of God.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 2. § 2.

I am confirmed in this interpretation by the second section of the Article; viz. of the remanency of concupiscence or original sin in the regenerate.

Id. On Original Sin. To the Bp. of Rochester.

What cunning means soever these new physicians could devise to overthrow the auncient manner of working by simples, yet it maintained still the remnants of the former credit, built surely upon the undoubted grounds of long experience.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 3.

— And in his braine,

Which is as dry as the remainder bisket
After a voyage, he hath strange places cram'd
With observation.—Shakes. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 7.

Entellus thus: My soul is still the same;
Unmov'd with fear, and moved with martial fame;
But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,
And scarce the shadow of a man remains.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. v.

Now in such cases all that can be expected, or need be desired, is, that the remaining part of the mixture, or some portion of it, affords crystals or grains of compounded solid figures.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 57.

But worn with years when dire diseases come,
Then hide his not ignoble age at home;
In peace 't enjoy his former palms and pains;
And gratefully be kind to his remains.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

Scarce seven, the thin remainder of my fleet,
From storms preserved within your harbour meet.
Id. Ib. Æneis, b. i.

This salt is a volatile one, and requires no strong heat to make it sublime into finely figured crystals without a remanence at the bottom.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 81.

But vows, for her, in every chance to give
The remnant years Heaven doom'd him yet to live.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxii.

To note again and again, to note attentively, carefully, to note or denote; to heed, to regard, to observe.

Louell. Now, sir, you speak of two
The most remark'd i' the kingdom.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act v. sc. 1.

Off. Ebrews, the pris'n'r Samson here I seek.
Cho. His manacles remark him, there he sits.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Above all things this was remarkable and admirable in him, the arts he had to acquire the good opinion and kindnesses of all sorts of men.—Cowley. Ess. Liberty.

— But I rest

Well satisfied in myself, being assured that Extraordinary virtues, when they soar, Too high a pitch for common sights to judge of,
Losing their proper splendour, are condemn'd
For most remarkable vices.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act ii. sc. 1.

Know, reader, that our English kings had always a monk, generally of St. Alban's (as near London, the staple of news and books) to write the remarkables of their reigns.
Fuller. Worthies. Buckinghamshire.

This I have remarkably taken notice of in the opinion of the extension of a spirit.

Glanvill. Preexistence of Souls, c. 8.

They signify the remarkableness of this punishment of the Jews, as signal revenge from the crucified Christ.
Hammond.

I shall only remark that when this text is away, there will be but one left in the whole Scripture where that particular form of expression is used, of God's making the world by the Son.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 32.

Thus banish'd, David spent abroad his time,
When to be God's anointed was his crime,
And when restor'd made his proud neighbours rue,
Those choice remarks he from his travels drew.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

Of all the gentle tenants of the place,
There was a man of special grave remark;
A certain tender gloom o'erspread his face,
Pensive, not sad, in thought involv'd, not dark.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

That famous astronomer, Cassini, took the pains to calculate backward a remarkable eclipse or two that are mentioned in the Chinese annals.
Bolingbroke. Ess. 3. On Monotheism.

My Lord Clarendon, whom the remarker hath so strangely yoked with the regicide, was unjustly, ungratefully, and cruelly persecuted.—Id. A Final Answer to the Remarks.

Or tell me, if you can, what pow'r maintains
A Briton's scorn of arbitrary chains;
That were a theme might animate the dead,
And move the lips of poets cast in lead.
The cause, tho' worth the search, may yet elude Conjecture and remark, however shrewd.
Cowper. Table Talk.

The saying of the prophet, "that the ways of God are not like those of men," was never more remarkably verified than in that great event which we this day commemorate, the death and passion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

RE-MARRY, v. Fr. Remarier, to marry again.
To wed again; to give or take in wedlock; to join in matrimony again.

If my daughter haue heyre or heyres by my lorde therle, and than she fortune to dye, thoughe the erle than remary againe a seconde tyme, and have issue by the seconde wyfe, yet for all that my daughter's heyre or heyres shall nat be disheryted.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 111.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

His watry eies drizzling like deawy rayne,
He up gan lifte toward the azure skies
From whence descende all hopelesse remedies.
Id. Ib. c. 5.

If there be a right, and a birth-right planted in the heir, and not remediable by courts of equity, and that right be submitted to your majesty, whereby it is both in your power and grace what to do, then I do wish that this rude mass and chaos of a good deed, were directed rather to a solid merit and durable charity, than to a blaze of glory that will but crackle a little in talk, and quickly extinguish.

Bacon. Advice to the King.

Cord. All blest secrets,
All you vnpublished vertues of the earth,
Spring with my tears, be aydant and remediate,
In the good man's desires.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 4.

But now (alas) too late I [Cresus] know it that the riches I possessed then were but words and opinion, all which are turn'd now to my bitter sorrow, and remediless calamity.

North. Plutarch, p. 79.

The remedy is wholly in your own hands, and therefore I have digressed a little in order to refresh and continue that spirit so seasonably raised among you, and to let you see, that by the laws of God, of nature, of nations, and of your country, you are, and ought to be, as free a people as your brethren in England.—Swift. Drapier, Let. 4.

To lament for sin here is a far less uneasy thing than to do it in a place where there is nothing but remediless wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 372.

The remedilessness of this disease may be justly questioned.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. Ess. 3.

The instruments whereby this remedy is obtained (which are sometimes considered in the light of the remedy itself) are a diversity of suits and actions, which is defined by the mirror to be "the lawful demand of one's right."

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 8.

Now since all wrong may be considered as merely a privation of right, the plain natural remedy for every species of wrong is the being put in possession of that right, whereof the party injured is deprived.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 8.

A third remedial, whereby a method is pointed out to recover a man's private rights, or redress his private wrongs.

All which [feoffments, exchanges, &c.] are digested into apt books, and are then sent to the remembrancer of the lord treasurer in the exchequer, to the end that he may make and send out processes upon them.

Bacon. The Office of Alienations.

And so likewise, though not so frequently, religion is expressed by the remembrance of God; now remembrance is the actual thought of what we do habitually know. To remember God is to have him actually in our minds, and upon all proper occasions to revive the thoughts of him.

Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 54.

And though all learning be not the remembrance of what the soul once actually understood in a pre-existent state, as Plato somewhere would have it, yet is all humane teaching but maieutical or obstetricious.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 693.

The bellowing winds with rage impetuous roar,
And dash the foaming billows on the shore;
Ev'n then the youth, with pleasing visions fed,
Glows with remembrance of the bridal bed.

(Varro, lib. v.) cum ea, quæ tenuit mens et memoria, cogitantur, et cogitando repetuntur. Vossius refers to an ancient menisci, which he derives from men-ere, the obsolete theme of memini. The word is not used very discriminately. See the quotation from Smith in v. Record; from Hobbs;—and—

A research for, a recalling to the mind, (sc. former ideas or thoughts;) recollection, remembrance.

There is yet another kind of discursion beginning with the appetite to recover something lost, proceeding from the present backward, from thought of the place where we miss at, to the thought of the place from whence we came last; and from the thought of that, to the thought of a place before, till we have in our mind some place, wherein we had the thing we miss: and this is called reminiscence.

Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 4.

But if you'd say that memory is in the brain, but reminiscency in the conarion, I answer, that these impresses, or signatures, made by outward objects in the brain must also of necessity be obliterated by superadvenient impressions.

More. Antidote against Atheism, App. c. 10.

Those perceptions that have the soul for their cause, are either the perceptions of her own acts of will, or else of her speculation of things purely intelligible, or else of imaginations made at pleasure, or, finally, of reminiscency, when she searches out something that she has let slip out of her memory.—Id. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 5.

Would truth dispense, we could be content, with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation, and new impressions but the colouring of old stamps which stood pale in the soul before.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, Pref. p. i.

Plato imagined, after more ancient philosophers, that every man is born with a certain reminiscence, and that when we seem to be taught we are only put in mind of what we knew in a former state.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 26.

Little regarding their inconstancy and remissnesse in God's cause or quarrell, [he] saide unto them right notably.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1693. an. 1556.

Propitiatory, expiatory, remissory, or satisfactory, signifie all one thing in effect, and is nothing els but a thing whereby to obtaine remission of sins, and to have salvation.

Latimer. Ser. Of the Plough.

Cran. Methinks, sir, you might have that interest

In your wife's brother, to be more remiss,

In his hard dealing against poor Sir Charles.

Heywood. A Woman killed with Kindness, Act i. sc. 1.

They [Papists] allow them [certain sins] to be such as deserve punishment, although such as are easily pardonable: remissible of course, or expiable by an easy penitence.

Feltham. Resolve, pt. ii. Res. 9.

They also doe by his divine permission,
Upon the thrones of mortal princes tend,
And often treat for pardon and remission

To suppliants, through frayltie which offend.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

— Like an unbent bow carelessly

His sinewy proboscis did remissly lie.

Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

This said, dumbe silence seiz'd them all, they shamed to deny,

And fear'd to undertake; at last, did Menelaus speake, Check'd their remissnesse, and so sigh'd, as if his heart would breake,

Aye me, but onely threatning Greeks not worthy Grecian names.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

He [Plutarch] spake of a καλὴν τροπὴν ἀρμονίαν κόσμῳ, a versatil harmony of the world, whereby things reciprocate forwards and backwards, as when a bow is successively intended and remitted.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 222.

Continual claims I've made, injunctions got

To stay my rival's suit, that he should not Proceed; spare me, in Hillary term I went:

You said, if I returned next 'sine in Lent,

I should be in remitter of your grace.—Donne, Sat. 2.

Yet all law, and God's law especially grants every where to error easy remittments, even where the utmost penalty exacted were no undoing.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

You [Whitby] object further, that Christ would not suffer himself to be called good, but remitted that title to the Father only.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 257.

For whether Earth's an animal, and air

Imbibes, her lungs with coolness to repair,

And what she sucks remits, she still requires

Inlets for air, and outlets for her fires.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

A compact among private persons furnished out the several remittances.—Addison. On Italy.

My generous brother is of gentle kind,

He seems remiss, but bears a valiant mind.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

To dry parts of the greatest size, and in the greatest remissness of density, add humid pores both very great and very rare.—Digby. On Bodies, c. 14.

[This mild remissness, if it do not prune a vice, at least it does but lop, and that prohibits not its future growth.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 25.

A wise or good man will not break with his friend for every offence, for a hasty word, for a slight affront or disrespect, for some indiscretion of conduct or frowardness of temper, for some remissness or tardiness in good offices, or some neglects and failures in services.

Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 140.

A train of heroes followed through the field,

Who bore by turns great Ajax' seven-fold shield;

Whene'er he breath'd remissive of his might,

Fir'd with incessant slaughters of the fight.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

How often have I blessed the coming day,

When toil remitting lent its turn to play,

And all the village train, from labour free,

Led up their sports beneath the spreading tree.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

Releases are a discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another that hath some former estate in possession. The words generally used therein are, remised, released, and for ever quit-claimed.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

Their rents are remitted to them in sugar and rum, the produce of their estates.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

The condition of a remitted forfeiture being as absolutely in the breast of the remitter as the condition on which the blessing was originally conferred, he was pleased it should be done by one man's willingly offering himself to death for an atonement for all.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. p. 116.

The same act of parliament which suppressed ten and five shilling bank notes, suppressed likewise this optional clause, and thereby restored the exchange between England and Scotland to its natural rate, or to what the course of trade and remittances might happen to make it.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

Perhaps we should grow remiss and thoughtless in these scenes of continual ease and delight, if we had not those dismal spectacles to rouse and alarm us.

Search. Light of Nature, pt. ii. c. 23.

When the laws were remissly or corruptly administered, good and ill would sometimes happen unequally to men.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 4.

RE-MOLTEN, i. e. remelted; melted or molten again. See MELT.

It were good to try in glass works, whether the crude materials of glasse, mingled with glasse already made, and remoulten, doe not facilitate the making of glass with less heat.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 779.

It were good, therefore, to try whether glass remoulten do lesse any weight.—Id. Ib. § 799.

REMONSTRATOR. } to call to mind again.

To re-present (to the mind, to the attention); to bring again under consideration or review; to show or exhibit for reflection; to urge reasons against any previous act or judgment; to warn, to expostulate.

And, lastly, your majesty did exhort them, by the opportunity which the present time itself did yield unto it; which I did particularly remonstrate unto them.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 494.

Is it not now rather to be wondered that such a weakness could fall from the pen of such a wise remonstrant man?

Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

You are not armed, remonstrant, nor any of your band; you are not dieted, nor your loins girt for spiritual valour and Christian warfare, the luggage is too great that follows your camp.—Id. Ib.

So that the king (with all main speed) was glad,

Both by his remonstrances well composed,

And with his sword (his best defence) provide

To right himself, and to correct their pride.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

It is a proper business of a divine to state cases of conscience, and to remonstrate against any growing corruptions in practice and especially in principles.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 341.

The ablest and soundest divines, as well Lutheran as Reformed, have reclaimed strongly against it, detesting the neutrality of the remonstrant brethren, as tending to undermine the Gospel of Christ.—Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 5.

Shortly after the beginning of the Parliament, there had been a committee appointed "to prepare and draw up a general remonstrance of the state of the kingdom, and the particular grievances it had sustained."

Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. i. p. 302.

And orders were sent down for clapping up three of the chief remonstrators.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1660.

How eloquently shines the glowing pole!

With what authority it gives its charge,

Remonstrating great truths in style sublime.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

RE/MORA. Fr. Remore; Lat. Remora, (re, and mora,) that which delays, hinders, or retards; applied to a fish. See the quotation from Spenser.

All sodainly there clove unto her keele

A little fish, that men call remora,

Which stopt her course, and held her by the heele,

That winde nor tide could move her thence away.

Spenser. The World's Vanitie.

Life is a voyage, and in our life's ways,

Countries, courts, towns, are rocks or remoras.

Donne. To Sir Henry Wotton.

Her store the tardy remora supplies,

With stones from eagle's warm, and dragon's eyes.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vi.

But these fantastical remoras do not obstruct us in the familiar transactions of life, nor do they ever enter into the head of a common man.

REMORD, v.
REMORDENCY.
REMORSE.
REMORSED.
REMORSEFUL.
REMORSELESS.
REMORSELESSNESS.
REMORSELESSLY.

Fr. Remordre; It. Rimordere; Sp. Remorder;
Lat. Remordere, (re, and mordere, to bite,) to bite again.
To bite, to gnaw again; to prey upon continually or repeatedly. Remorse is applied to—

The gnawing pains of the mind or conscience for any act; to compunction or regret; to the relentings of compassion or sympathy.

And God yeueth and departeth to other folke, prosperitees and aduersities, medled to heape, after the qualitie of hir courages, and remordeth some folke by aduersities, for thei ne should not waxen proude by long welfulness.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

But for she had a manner remors

In her selfe, greuing her conscience.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes.

And venomously stingyng

Rebukyng and remordyng

And nothyng accordyng.—Skelton. Against the Scottes.

One which knewe of the conspiracie against him, and by all lykelihode did participate therin, beyng meued either with loue or pitie, or other wyse his conscience remordyng against the destructiō of so noble a prince, &c.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

The Phocenses at the sighte of the cognisaunce of the God, striken with inwarde remorse of conscience for their offences, cast downe their wepons and take them to flight.

Goldyng. Justine, fol. 42.

When troubled conscience reads accusing scroules,

Which witness'd are even by the breast's own blood;

O what a terrour wounds remordyng soules,

Who poyson finde, what seem'd a pleasant food.

Stirling. Domes-day. The first Houre.

But they, him spying, both with greedy forse

Attonce upon him ran, and him beset

With strokes of mortall steele without remorse,

And on his shield like yron sledges bet.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

The soul of the remorseful sinner draweth near to the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. Case 9.

Sil. Oh, Eglamore, thou art a gentleman;

Thinke not I flatter, (for I sweare I doe not.)

Valiant, wise, remorse-full, well accomplish'd.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 3.

— He well might know he could not fashion him

In ruth's soft mould, he had no spirit to brooke that interim

In his hot furie: he was none of these remorseful men,

Gentle and affable; but fierce at all times, and mad then.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

Eurylochus, straight hasted the report

Of this his fellowes most remorseful fate.

Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. x.

The Scythians, even the marble-hearted Fates,

Could not have acted more remorseless deeds,

In their relentless natures, than these of thine.

A Yorkshire Tragedy, Act i. sc. 8.

For with such fell remorselessness she n'er

Had heartned up her tallons and her teeth,

To wage her monstrous hunger's war, as here.

Beaumont. Love's Mystery, c. 9. s. 139.

That remordency of conscience, that extremity of grief, they feel within themselves.—Killingbeck. Ser. p. 175.

Thus having said, of kind remorse bereft,

He seiz'd his helm, and dragg'd him with his left;

Then with his right hand, whilst his neck he wreath'd,

Up to the hilts his shining falchion sheath'd.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

He said, and with the rage of rapine stung,

The multitude tumultuous rush along.

On swords and spears, on sires and sons they tread,

And all remorseless spurn the gory dead.

Rowe. Lucan, b. vii.

No; this excused not the rigour of a merciless proceeding from him, who had but newly tasted of mercy, and being pardoned, a thousand talents, remorselessly and unworthily took his fellow by the throat for an hundred pence.

South, vol. x. Ser. 6.

When remorse is blended with the fear of punishment, and arises to despair, it constitutes the supreme wretchedness of the mind.—Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. c. 2. s. 3.

This remorseful consciousness, too, he might feel, when looking back upon his conduct;—though until then he had blindly consulted his own gratification in seeking the pleasure of Vanessa's society, without being aware of the difficulties in which they were both becoming gradually entangled.—Scott. Memoirs of Swift, s. 5.

REMOVE, v.
REMOVE, n.
REMOVABLE.
REMOVAL.
REMOVEDNESS.
REMOVED.
REMOVEDLY.
REMOVEDNESS.
REMOVEDLY.
REMOVEDLY.

Fr. Remouvoir, remuer; It. Rimovere; Sp. Remover; Lat. Removere, (re, and movere,) to move back again, to move again.
By Gower, Chaucer, &c. written remue, from the Fr. Remuer.
To move again, to move away, out of the way, afar, to a distance; to put from or out of its place, to a distant place.

Remote.—moved to, placed at, a distance; situate afar off; distant; disjoined, disconnected.

But sickerly, withouten any fable,
The hors of brass, that may not be remued;
It stant, as it were to the ground yglued.

Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,485.

As for to trusten some wight is a preue

Of trouthe, and forthy would I faine remue

Thy wrong conceit. Id. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

For he none other hede toke,

But that he might by somme croke,

All though it were ageyne hir wille,

The lustes of his flesh fulfille,

Whiche loue was not reasonable.

For where honour is remuable,

It ought well to ben aduised. Id. Ib. b. vii.

When the sayd bisshoppes entred the sayd synode, Austen sate styll in the chayre & remouyd not; wherfore they were wrothe, & disdayned hym, & wolde not obey to his requestes.

Fabyan. Chronicle, vol. ii. c. 119.

Mar. Looke with what courteous action

It wafts you to a more remoued ground;

But doe not goe with it.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 4.

Which driuing through the sands, he did reuerse

(His birth's-craft strait remembering) all their houses;

And them transpos'd, in opposite remoues;

The fore, behinde set; the behinde, before.

Chapman. Homer. An Hymne to Hermes.

And tho' these frequent removes and tumblings under climes of differing temper were not without some danger, yet the delight which accompany'd them was far greater.

Howell, b. i. Let. 40.

In this estate of consuls (two Remouable each yeare)

Five hundred yeares well neare.

Warner. Albion's England, b. xii. c. 74.

Within the space of not many minutes after the fall of the body, and removal thereof into the first room, there was not a living creature in either of the chambers, no more than if it had lien in the sands of Æthiopia.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 234.

Pol. I haue considered so much (Camillo) and with some care, so farre, that I haue eyes vnder my seruice, which looke vpon his remouednesse: from whom I haue this intelligence, that he is seldome from the house of a most homely shepherd.—Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 1.

The mislayer of a meere stone is to blame. But it is the unjust Judge that is the capitall remover of land-markes, when he defineth amisse of lands and property.

Bacon. Ess. Of Judicature.

So forth she rode, without repose or rest,

Searching all lands and each remotest part,

Following the guydance of her blinded guest,

Till that to the sea-coast at length she her address.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

He lost in this attempt his last dear blood;

And I (whom no remoteness can deterr.)

If what seems difficult be great and good,

Thought his example could nor make me err.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 8.

If therefore we would do God right in our thoughts and conceptions of him, we must, in the first place, remove from him all defect in the thing, i. e. all matter and material per-fections; because they are defective in their very kind and nature, as excluding such substance and perfections as are incomparably more excellent than themselves; and this is to conceive of him in the way of remotion, which consists in removing all kind of matter and material affections from our thoughts and apprehensions of God.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. s. 2.

They [medals] may pass into the hands of a posterity that lie many removes from us, and are like to act their part in the world, when its governments, manners, and religions may be quite altered.—Addison. On Ancient Medals

Canst thou, remote, the mingling hosts decry,
With hands unactive, and a careless eye?

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

[He] remotely administers to all immorality and dissoluteness of manners, by taking off the influence of the best instructions of their more knowing and more edifying guides.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 104.

His obscurities are indeed sometimes affected, but they generally arise from the remoteness of the customs, persons, and things he alludes to.—Addison. On Ancient Medals.

All theologians, as well Pagan as Christian, give this direction, for the conceiving of God, that it should principally be done, per viam remotiōis, by way of remotion or abstraction.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 696.

Dionysius the areopagite, and from him all the schoolmen, assign three ways by which we are to frame our apprehensions of the nature of God, viz. viam causalitatis, viam eminentiæ et remotiōis; i. e. the way of causality, the way of eminency, and the way of remotion.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. s. 2.

Upon this supposition, every honest man will find reason enough, both to bear contentedly whatever uneasy circumstances he lies under, and to trust in God's mercy for the removal of them.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 11.

We have searched every corner of the human breast, and found that all our motives derive either immediately or remotely from our own satisfaction and complacency of mind.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 36.

The term, therefore, allowed for the indemnification of the landlord, ought not to be a great deal longer than what was necessary for that purpose; lest the remoteness of the interest should discourage too much this attention.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. iii. b. v. c. 2.

We do not find the conception of a continual perishing and removal of time by an uninterrupted succession of moments debases our idea of God.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 13.

RE-MOUNT, v. Fr. Remonter; It. Rimontare; Sp. Remontar, to mount again. See MOUNT.

To mount or ascend again; to re-ascend; to climb up again; to raise or rise again.

O thou that art souverain comfort of courages anguissous, so thou hast remounted and nourished me with the weight of thy sentences, an with delite of singyng, so that I trowe not that I be vnperregall to the strokes of fortune.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

And when he was remounted, he made a countenance to assaile his aduersary.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 6.

He, backe returning by the yvorie dore,
Remounted up as light as chearefull larke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

— That very morn

The Sun was enter'd into Capricorn;
Which, by their bad astronomer's account,
That week the Virgin Balance should remount.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The shortest and the surest method of arriving at real knowledge is to unlearn the lessons we have been taught, to remount to first principles, and take nobody's word about them.—Bolingbroke. Idea of a Patriot King.

Without remounting to the remote antiquities of either the French or English monarchies, we may find in much later times many proofs that such effects must always flow from such causes.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 4.

RE-MUGIENT. Lowing or bellowing again; rebellowing.

Earthquakes accompanied with remugient echoes, and ghastly murmurs from below.

More. Mystery of Godliness, p. 63.

REMUNERATE, v. Fr. Rémunérer; It. Remunerare; Sp. Remunerar; Lat. Remunerari, (re, and munus, see MUNIFICENT), to return, or repay, an office or service done.

To give or pay in return for, in recompense or requital of; to recompense, to requite, to reward.

He [Edward IV.] promised great rewardes and this addition, that if any souldiour, which volūtariely would abide, and in or before the conflict flye, or turne his backe, that then he that could kil him, should haue a great remuneration and doble wages.—Hall. Henry VI. an. 39.

And therewithal the execrable act

On their late murder'd king they aggravate:
How he employ'd the doers of the fact,
Whom afterwards he did remunerate.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Such execrable infamous apostates as these can expect no other reall remuneration of this their treachery and perfidiousnesse.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iv. p. 216.

But liberty of will [is that] whereby men deserve commendation and blame, rewards and punishments, and so become fit objects for remunerative justice to display itself upon.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 690.

The liberty and remunerability of human actions.

Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 2.

From the time of his first engagement till about the year 1770, he [Marchi] continued with Reynolds, who had for several years remunerated his services.

Reynolds. Memoirs by Malone.

Human legislators have for the most part chosen to make the sanction of their laws rather vindictory than remuneratory, or to consist rather in punishments, than in actual particular rewards.—Blackstone. Com. vol. i. Intro.

RE-MURMUR, v. Lat. Murmurare; Gr. Μορμυρεῖν, properly spoken of flowing waters a little roughened.

To murmur again; to repeat or re-echo, a murmur; (sc.) a sound similar to that of roughly flowing waters.

A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans remurmuring to the floods,
Or birds of different kinds in hollow woods.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

Where'er he pass'd, a purple stream pursued
His thirsty falchion, fat with hostile blood;
Bath'd all his footsteps, dy'd the fields with gore,
And a low groan remurmur'd through the shore.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

RENATE. } Lat. Renascens, renatus, pres.
RENA'GENCY. } and past part. of renasci, to be born again. See NATIVE.

Born again; raised or risen again.

Beyng not onely strange and marueylous, but also prodigious and unnaturall, to feyne a dead man to be renated and newly borne agayne.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 7.

And to confirm yourself in me renate,
I hope you'll find my wits legitimate.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Wit at Several Weapons, Act i. sc. 1.

Leave the stools as close to the ground as may be, especially if you design a renascency from the roots.

Evelyn, b. iii. c. 3. p. 31.

Job would not only curse the day of his nativity, but also of his renascency, if he were to act over his disasters and the miseries of the dunghill.

Brown. Christian Morals, vol. iii. p. 23.

Manye other contumelies and dispightes, the Turkes and the false renegade Christiēns manye tymes dooe.

Id. Ib. p. 1212.

For he was a renegado, which is one that first was a Christian, and afterwards becometh a Turke.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 186.

— His captaines heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his brest, reneages all temper,
And is become the bellowes and the fan
To coole a gypsies lust.

Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 1.

Meanwhile, they knock'd against the door,
As fierce as at the gate before;
Which made the renegado knight
Relapse again t' his former fright.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

For renegadoes, who ne'er turn by halves,
Are bound in conscience to be double knaves.

Dryden. Abalom & Achitophel.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 88.

They inuade the vttermost bouides of the Chivrones, where they recountred many as they fled scatered here and there, and gate a great bootie of cattell.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 169.

I fell in company with Sir Johan Joell and Sir Jaques Planchyn, and, without any busynesse or reencounter, we came to the captall.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 29.

For I thinke verely that your aduersarie king Phillip will meete with you to fight, and ye shall find many streight passages and reencountries.—Grafton. Edw. III. an. 20.

Who, seeing him from far so fierce to pricke,
His warlike armes about him gan embrace,
And in the rest his ready speare did sticke;
Tho', when as still he saw him towards pace,
He gan reencounter him in equall race.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Which when this palmer saw, he gan to feare
His toward perill, and untoward blame,
Which by that new reencounter he should reare;
For death sate on the point of that enchaunted speare.

Id. Ib.

Was it by mere chance that these blind parts of matter, floating in an immense space, did, after several justlings and reencounters, jumble themselves into this beautiful frame of things?—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 4.

A fearful vision doth his soul molest;
Seeming to see in rev'rent form appear
A fair and goodly woman all distrest;

Which, with full-weeping eyes and rented hair,
Wringing her hands as one that griev'd and pray'd.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Oh thou! whose thunder rends the clouded air,
Who in the heaven of heavens has fix'd thy throne,
Supreme of Gods! unbounded and alone!
Hear! and before the burning sun descends,
Before the night her gloomy veil extends,
Low in the dust be laid yon hostile spires.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

On Mount Vesuvio next he fixt his eyes,
And saw the smoking tops confus'dly rise;
(A hideous ruin!) that, with earthquakes rent,
A second Ætna to the view present.

Addison. Silius Italicus, b. xii.

And yet (O Goddess) wouldst thou please to swear
The God's great oath to me, before thou heare
Thy blessed sonne here; that thou wilt erect
A phane to him, to render the effect
Of men's demands to them, before they fall;
Then will thy sonnes renowne be general.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Apollo.

—Newnesse
Of Cloten's death (we being not knowne, not muster'd Among the bands) may driue vs to a render
Where we haue liu'd.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 4.

It wou'd be pretty now, if I shou'd insist upon the render- ing up of Tournay by Woolsey's treason.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

Every language hath certain idioms, proverbs, and peculiar expressions of its own, which are not rendible in any other, but paraphrastically.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 21.

"Let us therefore lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us;" so we read the words of the apostle: but St. Chrysostom's rendition of them is better.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

For these two lords being pupils, and under the king's tuition, were carried with him to Oxford, where they remained till the rendition of the place.
Hutchinson. Memoirs, vol. ii. p. 133.

Encourag'd hence, maintain the glorious strife,
Till every soldier grasp a Phrygian wife,
Till Helen's woes at full reveng'd appear,
And Troy's proud matrons render tear for tear.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The heathen astrologers and renderers of oracles wisely forbore to venture on such predictions.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 679.

St. John himself follows that rendering, as you may observe by comparing John vi. 45, with Is. liv. 13.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 48.

The Jews, who at all hands lie upon the catch, charge
Paul as a perverter of the prophet's meaning, in a false ren- dition of the sense of the place.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 2.

The true rendering of the original I take to be, "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that he is near at the doors."—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 1.

RENDEZVOUS, n. } Fr. Rendez-vous. The RENDEZVOUS, v. } noun is common in our old writers; the verb formed upon it is not so.
Assembly or meeting, or place of assembling or meeting: of resort.

The generall agreement was to meete at Zante, an island
neere to the maine continent of the west part of Morea, well known of all the pilots, and thought to be the fittest place of their rendeuous.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 285.

If we shall not happen to meet at Cape Rase, then the place of rendezvous to be at Cape Briton, or the nearest harbour vnto the westward of Cape Briton.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 148.

The captaines call'd forthwith from euery tent,
Vnto the rende-vous he them inuites,
Letter on letter, post on post he sent,
Entreatance faire with counsell he vnites.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. i. v. 19.

The rest that escaped marched towards the Thames, and with others rendezvoused upon Blackheath.
Sir T. Herbert. Memoirs of King Charles I.

REN

All men are to be rendezvoused in a general assembly.
Philips. Conf. of the Danish Mission, 1719. p. 310.

The day was nam'd, the next that should be fair:
All to the general rendezvous repair,
They try their fluttering wings, and trust themselves in air.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

There is the general rendezvous of all angels and all good souls; there they live in one family, and converse in the most familiar manner, and embrace one another with the most tender love.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 15.

RE-NERVE, v. Re, and nerve, (qv.)
To nerve, string, or strengthen again.

The sight re-nerued my courser's feet.—Byron. Mazeppa.

RENE/WING, n. } repair, to revive, to refresh;
to keep or preserve new or fresh; to renovate.

Though oure uttir man be corruptid, netheles the ynnere man is renewid fro dai to dai.—Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 4.

To wring and waile, to turne, and sigh and grone,
Whan that thy lady absent is from thee,
And eke renew the wordes all that she Between you twain hath said.—Chaucer. Court of Loue.

He made solempne processe agaynst all prestres, deacons, and subdeacons that had marryed wyues, renuinge all his former statutes and actes made against them.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

The restfull place, renuer of my smart.
Wyatt. Complaint vpon Loue.

Then gan he all this storie to renew,
And tell the course of his captivitee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

Mirth-marring monster, [jealousy] born a subtle liar
Hateful unto thyself, flying thine own desire;
Feeding upon suspect, that doth renew thee;
Happy were lovers if they never knew thee.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

The Apostle here [Gal. vi.] shewethe unprofitableness of all these [ceremonies], and sets up an inward sanctity and renewedness of heart against them all.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 663.

But well I wote that to an heavy hart
Thou art the roote and nourse of bitter cares,
Breeder of new, renewer of old smarts;
Instead of rest thou lendest rayling tears.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

The words of the original may be rendered, "by the laver of regeneration, and by the renewing;" and so some have translated or interpreted them.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 342.

The old custom upon many estates is to let for leases of lives, renewable at pleasure.—Swift. Miscellanies.

The revolution was, in many instances, and it ought to have been so in all, one of those renewals of our Constitution that we have often mentioned.
Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 18.

He is not his own regenerator, or parent, at all in his new birth: for that would be a solecism in speech, and a contradiction in notion: he is, however, his own renewer, though in part only, and in subordination to the principal agent.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 352.

When it was first intimated to Abraham that the Messiah was to arise among his descendants, it was at the same time declared that the blessing was to reach to all the families of the earth: and this declaration was constantly repeated upon every renewal of the glorious promise to Isaac and to Jacob.—Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 25.

RENITENT, } Fr. Renitent, renitence; It.
RENITENCE. } Renitente; Lat. Renitens, pres.
RENITENCY. } part. of reniti, (re, and niti,) to strive against.

Striving against; resisting, repressing; reluctant.

To me it seems most probable that it is done by an inflation of the muscles, whereby they become both soft and yet renitent, like so many pillows, dissipating the force of the pressure, and so preventing or taking away the sense of pain.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The learned chancellor of Paris determines, that however those meetings which have no other intuition but meer pleasure, cannot be free from some venial offence; yet that he who comes to the marriage-bed, not without a certain renitency and regret of minde that he cannot live without the use of matrimony, offends not.
Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. i. s. 8.

It may have been sometimes invidiously suggested that the insisting so strongly upon the necessity of believing, or

REN

however, of not opposing this doctrine, is carrying matters to an immoderate height, and tends to provoke others to run into a contrary extreme out of a kind of indignation and excessive renitence.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. c. 5. p. 97.

RE/NNET. } Some derive from reine, the RE/NNETING. } queen of apples; others from rana, because it is spotted like a frog. Skinner suggests the city Rennes. And see the quotations, which point to another source.

The pear-main, which to France long ere to us was known
Which careful fruit'ers now have denizen'd our own.
The renet, which though first it from the pippin came,
Grown through his pureness nice, assumes that curious name.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

And I am informed that pippins grafted on a pippin stock are called renates, bettered in their generous nature by such double extraction.—Fuller. Worthies. Lincolnshire.

RE/NNET. Holland so renders the Lat. Co- agulū, and also by the word rendle, (the rendle of the male hare, b. xxviii. c. 19.) Perhaps so called from ge-runnen, rinnen, in concretus, coagulatus, run together; Ger. Rennen, in se fluere, h. e. coagulari.
See Skinner and Wachter.

Let a nource annoint her breast with the rennet of an hare.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 19.

As for the mischeevous mouse called the hardishrew, the rennet found in a lambes maw taken in wine healeth the hurt that commeth by her biting.—Id. Ib. b. xxix. c. 4.

renovelen.—Id. The Persones Tale.

And also mo renouelaunces
Of old forleten aqueintaunces.—Id. House of Fame, b. ii.

For whosoever hath done wickedly an aet against God, and afterward is sorry for it, cryeth God mercy, and so commeth to forgiveness of the same sinne, but by and by willingly and wittingly doth the selfe same sin againe; he renouateth by so doing all those sinnes which before times were forgiven him.—Latimer, Ser. 7. On the Lord's Prayer.

This ambassade was sent for three causes, one to visite and comfort the king, beyng sorrowfull and sadde for the death of so good a queene and spouse. The second for the renouation of the old league and amitie.
Grafton. Hen. VII. an. 19.

O man! tyrannic lord! how long, how long,
Shall prostrate nature groan beneath your rage,
Awaiting renovation?
Thomson. Winter.

Whereas renovation, the other article in the text, seems to mean a more particular kind of renewal, namely, of the inward frame or disposition of the man.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 349.

Secondary qualities, resulting from the order wherein the substances forming a compound lie situate, are continually destroyed and renovated according to the changes made in that order by motions of the component parts.

And sayd, Paynim, this is thy dismall day;
Yet if thou wilt renounce thy miscreaunce,
And my trew liegeman yield thyselfe for aye,
Life will I graunt thee for thy valiaunce.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

I hold you as a thing en-skied, and sainted,
By your renouncement, an immortall spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.—Shakes. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 5.

On this firm principle I ever stood;
He of my sons who fails to make it good,
By one rebellious act renounces to my blood.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Such a kind of affection, though it were sufficient to make the other a martyr, yet could not preserve him from being an apostate, and renouncer or blasphemous of religion.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 14.

But since they're at renouncing, 'tis our parts
To trump their diamonds, as they trump our hearts.
Dryden. Prologue to the Princess of Cleves.

The first may be taken from the known custom of the primitive church, in requiring the competentes, or candidates for baptism, first to make a solemn renunciation of idolatry and false worship, under the general title of the devil and all his pomps, &c.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 190.

All that the genial ray of morning gilds,
And all that echoes to the song of even,
All that the mountain's sheltering bosom shields,
And all the dread magnificence of heaven,
O how canst thou renounce, and hope to be forgiven?
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

Now, in the case of the Jews under Samuel, there was a renunciation, it is true, on the part of the people, or, in plainer English, a rebellion.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. s. 2.

Goe to then, O thou far renowmed sonne
Of great Apollo, show thy famous might
In medicine, that els hath to thee wonne
Great pains, and greater praise, both never to be donne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

So wrought divine Vlysses through his woes;
So croun'd the light with him, his mother's throes;
As through his great renowner I have wrought,
And my safe saile, to sacred anchor brought.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

A foreign son-in-law shall come from far,
(Such is our doom,) a Chief renown'd in war;
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,
And thro' the conquer'd world diffuse our fame.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vii.

For while, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wandering eyes, and round the temple gaz'd;
Admir'd the fortune of the rising town,
The striving artists, and their arts renown.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Of all mankind beside, Fate had some care,
But for poor Wit no portion did prepare,
'Tis left a rent-charge to the brave and fair.
Dryden. Prolog. After the Fire.

Our kings, since the establishment of the Civil list, have not only a private and separate estate, but receive a kind of rent-charge out of the publick estate, to maintain their honour and dignity, nothing else.
Bolingbroke. A Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 17.

His lordship's rent-roll is exceeding great.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 6.

The word rent or render, reditus, signifies a compensation or return, it being in the nature of an acknowledgment given for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. It is defined to be a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 3.

First he his beard did shave, and fowly shent;
Then from him reft his shield, and it renverst,
And blotted out his armes with falsehood blent;
And himselfe baffuld, and his armes unherst;
And broke his sword in twaine, and all his armour sperst.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 4.

What fortune strange, what strange misfortune erst
Did tosse me with a thousand things in vaine,
Whiles sad despaires confounded did remaine?
Whiles all my hopes were to the winds disperst?
Erected whiles, and whiles againe renuerst?
Stirling. Aurora, s. 77.

'Tis a total renversement of the order of nature before 'tis begun, and every consideration opposes it.
Stukely. Palæologia Sacra, p. 60.

RE-OBTAIN, v. To get or gain the hold or possession again.

I came to re-obtaine my dignitie,
And in the throne to seate my sire againe.
Mirrouir for Magistrates, p. 752.

RE-OPPOSE, v. To oppose again, or in return; to put, place, or set against, or in resistance to—again.

And we shall so far encourage contradiction as to promise no disturbance, or re-oppose any pen that shall fallaciously or captiously refute us; that shall only lay hold of our lapses, single out digressions, corollaries, or ornamental conceptions, to evidence his own in as indifferent truths.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, Pref. p. 6.

RE-ORDAIN, v. }
REORDAINING, n. } To ordain again or anew.
REORDINATION. }

The re-ordaining of priests is a matter already resolutely maintained.—Bacon. Of Church Controversies.

In this point of reordaining such as were ordained in heresy or schism, the Church of Rome has not gone by any steady rule.—Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1554.

He proceeded in his ministry without expecting any new mission, and never thought himself obliged to a reordination.—Atterbury.

RE-O'RDERING, n. Ordering or arranging again; restoration to order or arrangement.

Yet thinking they would never be so bold,
To lead their lord in any shameful wise;
But rather would conduct him as their king,
As seeking but the state's re-ordering.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

For the re-ordering of my exchanges, which have been much incommoded by the falling of Seignor Burlamachie's credit here.—Reliquia Wottoniana, p. 485.

RE-O'RGANIZE, v. To organize again; to compose or arrange again.

Allowing our resurrection to be but possible, it must be every whit as easy to that infinite power by which Christ was raised, to reduce all our scattered atoms into one mass again, and to re-organize them into a humane body, and reunite it to its ancient soul, as it was to quicken the yet uncorrupted body of our Saviour.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7. s. 11.

By whose omnipotent agency all those holy relicks of the bodies of his saints, which are now scattered about the world, shall be gathered up, reunited, and re-organized into glorious bodies.—Id. Ib.

RE-PACIFY, v. To pacify or restore to peace again.

Which on th' intelligence was notify'd
Of Richard's death, were wrought to mutiny;
And hardly came to be repacify'd,
And kept to hold in their fidelity.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

RE-PACK, v. To pack again.

In order to render them what are called merchantable herrings, it is necessary to repack them with an additional quantity of salt; and in this case, it is reckoned that three barrels of sea sticks (i. e. herrings caught and cured at sea) are usually repacked into two barrels of merchantable herrings.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 5.

RE-PAINT, v. To paint again.

The sky has been ill repainted, and does not harmonize with the rest of the work.—Reynolds. Journey to Flanders.

The ground of this picture has been repainted, or the white horse, which was certainly intended to make the mass of light broader, has lost its brightness.—Id. Ib.

Saynt George here in this castell, for the reparacions therof, a thousande and fyue hundred frankes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 52.

Which when he felt to move, he hoped faire
To call backe him to her forsaken shop:
So well he did her deadly wounds repaire,
That at the last shee gan to breath out living aire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repaire and health,
The fit is strongest.
Shakespeare. King John, Act iii. sc. 4.

For the parts in man's body easily reparable (as spirits, blood, and flesh) die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, (as bones, nerves, and membranes.)
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 58.

Reparative inventions, by which art and ingenuity study to help and repair defects or deformities.

Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 60.

He [Buckingham] saw plainly that he must abroad again to rectify, by his best endeavour under the publick service, his own reputation. Whereupon new preparatives were in hand, and partly reparatives of the former beaten at sea.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 230.

And lastly all that castle quite he raced,
Even from the sole of his foundation,
And all the hewen stones thereof defaced,
That there mote be no hope of reparation,
Nor memory thereof to any nation.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

These roads, that yet the Roman hand assert,
Beyond the weak repaire of modern toil.

Thomson. Liberty, pt. ii.

So may he add that other title to the rest of those you have deserved for your countries good, to make you reparers of the breaches of the city as well as of the nation, and restorers of paths to dwell in.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 1.

The expense of maintaining the fixed capital in a great country may very properly be compared to that of repairs in a private estate.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 2.

He [Henry the Great] would be never transported beyond himself with choler, but he would pass by any thing with some repartee, some witty strain, wherein he was excellent.

Howell, b. i. Let. 18. s. 1.

If wise thou wilt appear and knowing,
Repartie, repartie,
To what I'm doing. Denham. Martial. Epigram.

As for reparty in particular, as it is the very soul of conversation, so it is the greatest grace of comedy, where it is proper to the characters.

Dryden. Preface to the Mock Astrologer.

They fancy that a repartee is not so brisk, or a story not so well told, or a man's sense about any thing so solemnly delivered, unless it be larded, at every turn, with the name of God, or a curse upon themselves.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 18.

A man renown'd for repartee
Will seldom scruple to make free
With friendship's finest feeling.—Cowper. Friendship.

RE-PASS, v. } Fr. Repasser. To pass or REPA'SSAGE. } go, lead or bring—back again;

But where as ye nowe wolde repell agayne that ye ones wyllingly agreed vnto and graunted, therefore here openly he repelyth agayne all suche graces and grauntes as he hath made to you before this tyme.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 222.

The kyng [Rich. II.] rested and sayde, howe he wolde go no farther, tyll he knewe what these people ayled, sayenge, if they were in any trouble, howe he wold repeale them agayne.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 384.

Though the hardenes of the law that by parliamēt was established, of that and other articles hath been repelled, yet that doctrine was neuer hitherto by any publike consaile or any thynge set forth by auctorite empayed.

Bp. Gardner. Explic. of the true Catholique Fayth, fol. 93.

Which my liege lady seeing, thought it best
With that his wife in friendly wise to deale,
For stint of strife and stablishment of rest
Both to herselfe and to her common-weale,
And all forepast displeasures to repeale.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

That she repeales him, for her bodies lust.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

Your last letters were acceptable; and our son before had intention to finish the marriage in his person; but lately receiving intelligence that one Philenzo, of noble birth, now in exile, though without your consent, had long since interest in your daughter's affection, we thought meet rather to advise for his repeal, than proceed to our dishonour.

Shirley. The Bird in a Cage, Act v. sc. 1.

I leave him, and the noble lord who sits by him, to settle the matter, as well as they can, together; for if the repeal of American taxes destroys all our government in America—he is the man!—and he is the worst of all the repealers, because he is the last.—Burke. On American Taxation.

REPEA'T, v. } Fr. Répéter; It. Repètere; REPEA'TER. } Sp. Repeter; Lat. Re-petere.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 1.

But Guyon all this while his booke did read,
Nor yet has ended: for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed
My leasure so long leaves here to repeat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

Yet I can repeat whole books that I have read, and poems of some selected friends, which I have liked to charge my memory with.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

For let a man be a diligent hearer and repeater of sermons and lectures; a constant reader and discourser of God's word; a strict observer of the Lord's day, &c.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, Act viii. sc. 7.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour-caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled.

This second or repetitional law being indeed a recapitulation and compendium of the first.—Biblioth. Bibl. i. 15.

Where Moses delivered the second or repetitional law.
Id. Ib. i. 27.

What feels the body when the soul expires,
By time corrupted, or consum'd by fires?
Nor dies the spirit, but new life repeats
In other forms, and only changes seats.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

In 1665 he [Jemmat] was the repeater or repetitioner in St. Mary's church on Low Sunday, of the four Easter sermons, which being admirably well performed, all to a word memoriter, without any hesitation, he obtained a great esteem among the academians.—Wood. Fasti Oxon. pt. ii.

Your lordship will pardon me for the frequent repetition of these cant words, which I could not avoid in this abbreviation.—Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, Ded.

And still, as each repeated pleasure tir'd,
Succeeding sports the mirthful band inspir'd.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

Whatever action, either good or bad, hath been done once, is done a second time with more ease and with a better liking; and a frequent repetition heightens the ease and pleasure of the performance without limit.
Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 28.

RE-PEDA'TION. Lat. Re-pedure, (re, and pes, a foot,) to set the foot, to step—back.

with all their good workes.—Barnes. Workes, p. 230.

But heare will subtyll blyndnes say, that God sawe bee-fore, that Jacob should doe good, and therefore dyd hee chuse hym. Hee sawe also, that Esau should doe no good, and therefore hee repelled hym.—Id. Ib. p. 278.

The Grekes chieftains all irked with the war,
Wherin they wasted had so many yeres,
And oft repulst by fatal destinie,
A huge herse made, hie raised like a hill,
By the diuine science of Minerua.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

He repulsed the Polonian king Stepan Batore, with his whole armie of 100,000 men.—Hackluyt. Voy. vol. i. p. 485.

If we truste vpon commendation or vaine glorie at meshandes, we lose our rewarde, and shal appeare one daye before the presence of the almighti most hie God, with emptie vessels lyke the folish virgins, and shal suffer a most greuous repulse of the spouse at his comming.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 12.

Whereas they readie found them to repell,
Great hostes of men in order martiall,
Which them forbad to land, and footing did forstall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

Yet twice they were repulsed backe againe,
And twice renforst backe to their ships to fly;
The whiles with blood they all the shore did staine,
And the gray ocean into purple dy.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 10.

Then, taught both impudence and wit,
I singled out my foe, us'd all the arts
That love could think upon, and in the end
Found a most absolute repulse.
Shirley. The Merchant's Wife, Act i. sc. 5.

Then there is a repulsion of the fume, by some higher hill or fabrick that shall overtop the chimney.
Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 38.

For the repulsive hand of Diomed doth not spend His raging darts there.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

The winds, like crafty courtizans, withheld
His flames from burning, but to blow them more:
And every fresh attempt he is repell'd
With faint denials weaker than before.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Why should the particles of common salt repel each other, so as not to subside in water? Why should the most repellent particles be the most attractive upon contact? Or why should the repellent begin where the attractive faculty leaves off.—Berkeley. Siris, s. 237.

First that you do not use repellents; for cold and tough humours, of which these swellings are created, are not capable of returning back as hot tumours, but do encrease
the more thereby.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 19.

'Tis true, the fervour of his generous heart
Brooks no repulse, nor could'st thou soon depart.

Thē they were appallyd in theyr myndis, & were very repetaut of ye dede yf they had done.—Fabyan, an. 1377.

They coule neither agree nor disagree to any thing lōg time together. One whyle repentyng them of that they had determined, and streyghtwaies forthought them of that repentance.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 307.

The worde gone out she backe againe would call,
As her repenting so to have missayd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Thus the hard laws of death were satisf'd,
And he left us like orphan friends and dy'd.
Now from the pulpit to the people's ears
Whose speech shall send repentant sighs and tears.
Endymion Porter. Epitaph upon Dr. Donne.

For earthly sight can nought but sorrow breed,
And late repentance, which shall long abide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

But Saxo Grammaticus sayth, that the sayd Swanus or Sweno, beyng conuerted vnto the Christen fayth, dyed at the length very repentauntly, and lyke a good Christian man.
Grafton, vol. i. pt. viii. Egeldred.

Those sentences from which a too-late repenter will suck desperation.—Donne. Devotions, p. 221.

Mine heart is turned within me; my repētings are rolled together.—Bible, 1583.

What this repentance was which the new covenant required, as one of the conditions to be performed by all those who should receive the benefits of that covenant, is plain in the Scripture, to be not only a sorrow for sins past, but (what is a natural consequence of such sorrow, if it be real) a turning from them into a new and contrary life.
Locke. Reasonableness of Christianity.

Amid the roses fierce repentance rears
Her snaky crest; a quick returning pang
Shoots through the conscious heart, where honour still,
And great design, against the oppressive load
Of luxury, by fits, impatient heave.—Thomson. Spring.

RE-PEOPLE, v. } To people again; to fill REPEO'PLING, n. } or stock again, with people, with inhabitants.

In us poor few the world consists alone,
And besides us there not remaineth one,
But from our seed the emptied earth agen
Must be re-peopled with the race of men.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

It hath a most excellent congruity with the subsequents of the holy history touching the descendents from the first man, the flood, and the re-peopling of the world from Noah.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 179.

Thus love of honey can an insect fire,
And in a fly such generous thoughts inspire.
Yet by re-peopling their decaying state,
Tho' seven short springs conclude their vital date,
Their ancient stocks eternally remain,
And in an endless race their children's children reign.
Addison. Virgil, Georg. 4.

I should find it very difficult to believe (unless I were to read it somewhere in the Bible) that of the millions that perished in the general deluge, all died hardened in impe-nitence and unbelief, insomuch that not one of that race could be an object of future mercy, beside the eight persons who were miraculously saved in the ark, for the purpose of re-peopling the depopulated earth.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

REPERCU'SS, v. Fr. Répercuter, réper-REPERCU'SSION. cutif, (a répercutive, REPERCU'SSIVE, adj. Cotgrave,) repercussif; REPERCU'SSIVE, n. It. Ripercussione, riper- cussivo; Sp. Repercutir; Lat. Repercutere, (re, per, quater,) to drive back, (sc.) by a repetition of blows or strokes.

To reverberate, to rebound, to reflect; to beat,
drive, or strike back.

It doth repercusse and smite backe the said disease, so that it shall not arise and grow.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 7.

Euen as the sunne (as th' astrologian dreames)
In th' airie region where it selfe doth moue,
Is neuer hote, yet, darting from aboue,
Doth parch all things that repercusse his beames.
Stirling. Aurora, s. 37.

That (with the repercussion of the air)
Shook the great eagle sitting in his chair.
Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

There hang down certaine buttons (as it were) like berries round in a circle, which with the repercussion and reverberation of the sun beames, doe shine againe like resplendent gold.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 25.

An hearbe this is [nightshade] which hath a vertue reper-cussive and refrigerative.—Id. Ib. b. xxvii. c. 13.

Blood is stanchd divers wayes: first by astringents, and repercussive medicines.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 66.

Defluxions, if you apply a strong repercussive to the place affected, and do not take away the cause, will shift to another place.—Id. Ib.

As long as we have strength to make any such resistance,
I [Beale] should prefer that method in agues before any violent repercussions.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 372.

What vigorous arm, what repercussive blow,
Bands the mighty globe still to and fro,
Yet with such conduct, such unerring art,
He never did the trackless road desert?
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

REPERTORY. Fr. Répertoire; It. Repertorio; Sp. Repertorio; Lat. Repertorium, from repertum, past part. of reperire, to find, (re, and perere.)

An inventory, an index, a register, a repository, (sc.) by or in which any thing may be found.

Hermippus, who wrote of that art most exquisitely, and commented upon the poem of Zoroastes, containing a hundred thousand verses twentie times told, of his making; and made besides a repertorie or index to every book of the said poësie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxx. c. 1.

His writings [Homer's] became the sole repertory to later ages of all the theology, philosophy, and history of those which preceded his.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. Errour & Superstition.

REPINE, v. } A word of English construction, composed of re, and pine; REP'NER. } REP'NING, n. } A. S. Pinan. See PINE. REP'NINGLY. } To pine at, to be sorry, to fret, to regret. See the quotation from Cogan.

For where a louer thinketh him promote,
Envy will grutch, repining at his wele.
Chaucer. Court of Loue.

In king Josias time, (who, being young, did alter, change, and correct wonderfully the religion,) it was never found in Jury that the people repined or saide The king is a childe; this geare will not last long.

Latimer. Third Sermon before King Edward.

Then the knyght retourned again to thē, and shewed the kynges wordes, the whiche gretly encouraged them, and repoynd in that they had sende to the kyng as they dyd.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 130.

Certaine, which be repiners against the truth, do racke and wrest a few places out of doctors, and two or three counsels for their pretended purpose.

Fox. Martyrs. Antiquity of Priests' Marriage, p. 1053.

She then began them humbly to intreat
To draw them longer out, and better twine,
That so their lives might be prolonged late:
But Lachesis thereat gan to repine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3

The English clergy had bickerings with their Dunstans; and stooped late and repiningly to this yoke under Anselme.

Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. iii. s. 9.

Let rash repiners stand appall'd,
In thee who dare not trust;
Whose abject souls, like demons dark,
Are murmuring in the dust.—Young. Resignation, pt. ii.

Repining is sorrow united with a degree of resentment against some superior agent, where the mind dares not to break forth into strong expressions of anger.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. c. 2. s. 3.

RE-PLACE, v. } To place back again, to REPLACEMENT. } put back or restore to its place; to reinstate, to reinvest.

A third t' a point more near the matter draws;
Swears if they would, he would attempt the thing,
To chase th' usurper, and replace their king.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

The deities of Troy, and his own penates, are made the companions of his flight; they appear to him in his voyage, and advise him; and at last he replaces them in Italy, their native country.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

What if we still rever'd the banish'd race,
And strove the royal vagrants to replace,
With fierce rebellions shook th' unsettled State,
And greatly dar'd, though cross'd by partial fate.
Churchill. The Prophecy of Famine.

The proportion between these two classes of consumers is determined by the proportion existing between that part of the annual produce destined to the replacement of that capital, and that destined for the purpose of revenue.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 3.

RE-PLAIT, v. See PLAIT.
To plait,—to infold, back again, over again.

In Raphael's first works are many small foldings often replaited, [in some editions repleated,] which look like so many whip cords.—Dryden. On the Art of Painting, s. 200.

RE-PLANT. } Fr. Replanter; It. Ripian- REPLANTA'TION. } tare, to plant again. See REPLANTING, n. } PLANT, IMPLANT.
To set or fix into (sc. the earth) again; to infix, place firmly, rootedly, again.

The chiefe enterpriser, with the fauour of her majesty, hath since continued the action by sending into the country againe and replanting this last yeere a new colony.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 266.

And these weake impes replanted by thy might.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

As for the plants, when they be a cubite long, [they] are replanted in a trench a foot deepe.

Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 24.

Hee had thought that it was materiall to the replanting of them, that they should stand just in the same position and accustomed coast of the heaven as they did before.

Id. Ib. b. xvii. c. 40.

Refining and purifying the minds and spirits of the lapsed creation, and every where attempting the replantation of that beautiful image [which] sin and vice had obliterated and defaced.—Hallywell. Saviour of Souls, p. 108.

RE-PLA'DER. See PLEA.

A plea or pleading again, anew.

In these cases the court will after verdict award a repleader, quod partes replacent; unless it appears from the whole record that nothing material can possibly be pleaded in any shape whatsoever, and then a repleader would be fruitless.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 24.

RE-PLA'NISH, v. } Fr. Réplétion, réplétif; REPLE'NISHER. } (repletive, Cotgrave;) It. REPLETE. } Replezione; Sp. Repleto, REPLETION. } replecion; Lat. Replere, repletus, (re, and plere, to fill,) to fill to the brim.

As if both the second and third hypostases were but certain replications (or echoes) of the first original Deity with abatement.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 581.

The plaintiff may plead again, and reply to the defendant's plea. The plaintiff in his replication may totally traverse the plea.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

RE-PO'lish, v. Fr. Repolir; re, and polish, (qv.) Lat. Polire.

To polish again; to brighten, give brightness to again; to refine.

But must we say she's dead? may't not be said,

That as a sundred clock is piecemeal laid,

Not to be lost, but by the maker's hand,

Repolish'd, without error then to stand.

Donne. A Funeral Elegy.

A hundred times consider what you've said:

Polish, repolish, every colour lay,

And sometimes add, but oftener take away.

Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

REPORT, v. } Fr. Rapporter; It. Ripor- REPO'RT, n. } tare; Reportare, to bear or REPO'RTER. } carry back, (re, and portare.) REPO'RTINGLY. } See PORTER.

And so befell, that the excellent renoun

Of the emperoures daughter dame Custance

Reported was, with every circumstance,

Unto these Surrien marchants.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4506.

I have and shall, for true or false report,

In wrong and right illoved thee all my live.

Id. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

Within vi. dayes after ye duke of Gloucestre was arrestid, he was foude deed in his bedde, beyng the xxiii. daye of February; of whose murdre dyuerse reportes ar made, which I passe ouer.—Fabyan. Hen. VI. an. 1447.

So as the report made here of the doctrine of the catholique churche vnder the name of papistes, is a very true reporte, and for want of grace reproved by thauctor as no true doctrine.—Bp. Gardner. Explic. Of the Presence, fol. 25.

So y^t hauing made all things sure for tharmy to passe, he returned agayn both the authour of the acte, and reporter of ye thing done.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 32.

It ill beseemes a knight of gentle sort,

Such as ye have him boasted, to beguyle

A simple maide, and worke so hainous tort,

In shame of knighthood, as I largely can report.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

—Fayre sir, how may I weene it trew,
That ye doe tell in such uncerteintee?
Or speake ye of report, or did ye see
Just cause of dread, that makes ye doubt so sore?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 9.

If you speak three words, it will (perhaps) some three times report you the whole three words.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 249.

The like eccho upon eccho, but only with two reports, hath been observed to be, if you stand between a house and a hill and lure towards the hill.—Id. Ib. § 250.

—I will leave my house,
And the discovery of my shame, to fate,
And any censure rather undergo,
Than be the reporter of my own disgrace.
Tuke. The Adventures of Five Hours, Act iii.

If thou dost loue, my kindenesse shall incite thee
To binde our louses vp in a holy band.
For others say thou dost deserue, and I Beleeue it better then reportingly.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iii. sc. 1.

If we do admit them to be true reporters of matters of fact, we must also of necessity admit them to be true reporters, nay, I say more, infallible reporters of our Saviour's doctrine; so as that their declarations of it must for ever conclude all christians.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

These reports are histories of the several cases, with a short summary of the proceedings, which are preserved at large in the record; the arguments on both sides and the reasons the court gave for its judgment; taken down in short notes by persons present at the determination.
Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd.

Besides these reporters, there are also other authors, to whom great veneration and respect is paid by the students of the common law.—Id. Ib.

An eye, whose judgment none effect could blinde,
Friendes to allure, and foes to reconcile;
Whose persing looke did represent a minde
With vertue fraught, reposed, voyd of gile.
Surrey. Epitaph on Sir T. W

The second was an holy nunne to chose,
Which would not let me be her chappellane,
Because she knew, she said, I would disclose
Her counsell, if she should her trust in me repose.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

So forth she rode, without repose or rest,
Searching all lands and each remotest part,
Following the guldance of her blinded guest,
Till that to the sea-coast at length she her addrest.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 4.

—He replied,

With wondrous reposedness of mind, and gentle words,
Reputation answered.—Tr. of Boccacini, p. 104.

For riches, not of the purse, (which is not here thought of,) but of the minde, what can be expected from that age, which is not capable of observation, carelesse of reposition?
Bp. Hall. A Censure of Travell, s. 6.

Letters can treasure up, and transmit matters of state to posterity, with as much faith, and be as authentick registers, and safe repositories of truth as any story whatsoever.
Howell. Letters, Ep. Ded.

Then wonder not to see this soul extend
The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend:
As swelling seas to gentle rivers glide,
To seek repose, and empty out the tide.
Dryden. Eleonora.

If others reposit their young in holes and dens, and secure themselves also therein, it is because such guard, such security is wanting, their lives being sought either by the hostility of man, or to satisfy the appetite of rapacious creatures.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 13.

The reposition of the luxated shoulder is performed either by the hand, bandage, or force of instruments.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c. 5.

He will call us to account for our memories, how we have employed them, whether we have been careful to treasure up in them such things as might be useful to our lives, or have only made them the repositories of things idle, and impertinent and unprofitable.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 10.

I cannot avoid mentioning here an instance of repose, in that faithful and accurate painter of nature, Shakspeare; the short dialogue between Duncan and Banquo, whilst they are approaching the gates of Macbeth's castle.

prehensive shortness, he both clears the man's innocence, and vindicates God's proceedings.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 11.

Xenophanes the Colophonian reprehensively admonished the Egyptians after this manner, that if they thought those to be Gods, they should not so lament them, but if they would lament them, they should no longer think them Gods.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 226.

That the religion of the Bramins is highly reprehensible every moralist must allow, when he considers that the most unworthy ideas of the Divinity, ideas destructive of morality, naturally arise from idol-worship.

Mickle. Inquiry into the Bramin Philosophy.

The name of profaneness, you will observe, in strict propriety of speech, belongs not only to the flagrant and avowed impiety of the atheist and libertine, but to the conduct of him who, without any thing notoriously reprehensible in his morals—any thing to make him shunned and disliked by his neighbours and acquaintances, lives, however, without any habitual fear of God and sense of religion upon his mind.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

REPRESE/NTMENT. } To state or station, to place before or propose, to show, hold forth, or exhibit,—the form or colour, the likeness, the image; to be present for, to act or appear in the character of, as agent for, performing the functions of—another.

Of her estate she her repented,
As her visage represented.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Also in good by participacion, and that is cleaped good, for farr fette, and representatiue of goodlie goodnesse.
Id. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

When Darius had spoken these wordes, ye representation of ye present peril so mased the al, y^t they were not able to shew their aduice, or to speke a word to ye matter.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 126.

For I aunswere to thys, that though the generall counsell doe represent the whole vniuersall church, yet neuerthelesse, in very deede, there is not the vniuersall church, but represent- atiue.—Barnes. Workes, p. 255.

And in that place he hath set prices, whō as representours of his image vnto men, he would haue to be reputed in the suprem and most high rounge.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 16.

Thus, touching images, that they be representers of vertue and good example.—Fox, p. 998. Henry VIII.

With thee yet shall he leave, for memory
Of his late puissance his ymage dead,
That living him in all activity
To thee shall represent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

If we consider what Numa ordained concerning images, and the representation of the gods, it is altogether agreeable unto the doctrine of Pythagoras: who thought that God was neither sensible nor mortall, but invisible, incorruptible, and onely intelligible.—North. Plutarch, p. 54.

As the supreme character of the Most High is verity; so what can more become or more magnificently deck his re-presentants on earth, than veracity it self?
Reliquiae Wottonianæ, p. 153.

They affirm foolishly, that the images and likenesses they frame of stone, or of wood, are the representances and forms of those who have brought something profitable, by their inventions, to the common use of their living.
Donne. History of the Sept, p. 93.

Art being but the imitator or secondary representor, it must not vary from the verity of the example; or describe things otherwise than they truly are or have been.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 19.

If kings become open professed idolaters, though private persons may not murder them, and their families, as Jehu;
yet the representative body, or greater part of their kingdoms, (as many pious divines affirm) may lawfully convent, depone, if not judge them capitally for it.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. i. p. 101.

God-like Telemachus, amongst them sat,
Griev'd much in mind; and in his heart begat
All representation of his absent sire;
How (come from far-off parts) his spirits would fire
With those proud wooers' sight.
Chapman. Homer. Odysey, b. i. p. 5.

I cannot discern by any help from reading, or learned men, (who have been to me the best and briefest indexes of books) that any nation hath in representation of great actions (either by heroicks or dramaticks) digested story into so pleasant and instructive a method as the English by their drama.—Davenant. Gondibert, Pref.

Formerly he was received and adored under the one common character of God, Lord, and Jehovah; not merely as representative of God the father, or as invested with his authority, but as strictly and truly God, consubstantial with God the father.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 32.

He acts also contrary to his trust, when he either employs the force, treasure, and offices of the society, to corrupt the representatives, and gain them to his purposes; or openly pre-ingles the electors, and prescribes to their choice, such whom he has by solicitations, threats, promises, or otherwise won to his designs; and employs them to bring in such who have promised beforehand what to vote and what to enact.—Locke. Of Civil Government.

As Christ did merit the remission of our sins, and the acceptance of our persons by his passions; so God did consign them to us in his resurrection; it being that formal act of grace, whereby, having sustained the brunt of God's displeasure, he was solemnly re-instated in favour, and we representatively, or virtually in him.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 30.

In your baptismal immersion you were representatively buried with him, that so as Christ was raised from the dead, so you, in conformity thereto, might live a new regenerate life.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

In so large a state as ours it is therefore very wisely contrived, that the people should do that by their representatives which it is impracticable to perform in person; representatives chosen by a number of minute and separate districts, wherein all the voters are, or easily may be, distinguished.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

RE-PRESS, v. } Fr. Réprimer; It. Reprimere; Sp. Reprimir; Lat. Reprimere, re-press-um, (re, and prem-ere.) See COMPRESS, DEPRESS, &c.
To press back; to push or force back, to restrain; to hold or keep down, to subdue.

And reed Mars, was that time of the yere
So feble, that his malice is him raft,
Repressed hath Uenus his cruell craft.
Chaucer. The Legend of Hypermetre.

And some so full of fury is, and despite,
That it surmounteth his repression.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

For he whiche sitte aboue the moone,
And all thynge maie spille and spede,
In euery cas, and euery nede,
His good kynge so well addresseth,
That all his fo men he represseth.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The madnes of the Welshemen and Scottes (whose often incursions and robberies he well had in his father's daies experimented and assailed) he studied to assuage and repress.
Hall. Hen. V. an. 1.

Do such things for the advancement of justice, and for the repression and punishment of malefactors, as by the advice of such of the said council as then shall be present with him he shall think meet.
Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. No. 56.

But if thou may with reason yet repress
The growing evill, ere it strength have gott,
And thee abandon'd wholly do possesse;
Against it strongly strive.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

And no doubt, overgrow they would and cover the whole face of the earth, were they not repressed and withstood by good husbandrie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 13.

Believe a friend, with thrice your years increas'd,
And let these youthful passions be repress'd.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Ye blind officious ministers of folly,
Could not her charms repress your zeal for murder?
Johnson. Irene, Act iv. sc. 10.

Mental distress equally repressive of the levity of the mind and the wanderings of the imagination to pleasurable objects, is not attended with that disturbance and distraction of the thoughts which are apt to be produced by the pain and debility of sickness.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 37.

REPRIEVE, v. } Fr. Repris, from the verb reprandre, to take back.
REPRIEVE, n. } See REPREHEND, and the quotation below from Blackstone.

Therefore I humbly crave your majestie
It to replevie, and my sonne reprove.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

But alas! now he is old,
Bit with hunger, nipt with cold,
What is left him?
Or to succour, or relieve him,
Or from wants oft to replevie him.
Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 3.

Lies there no way, my lord, them to relieve,
And for their ransoms two such to retain?
Quoth Suffolk, Come, we'll hazard their replevie,
And share our fortunes.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

His [the sailor's] sleeps are but reprieves of his dangers; and when he wakes, 'tis the next stage to dying.

Overbury. Charact. G. 7.

Even a short repentance, when sincere, gains time, by a reprieve from punishment.—Stillington, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

The Eleusinian mysteries got a reprieve till the reign of Theodosius the elder, when they were finally abolished.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

A reprieve, from reprandre, to take back, is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, whereby the execution is suspended.—Blackstone. Com. b. iv. c. 31.

REPRIMAND, n. } Fr. Réprimande, from REPRIMAND, v. } Réprimer; Lat. Re-primere, to repress, (qv.)

A repression or restraint, a reprehension, rebuke, reproof.

Lord Burghley reprimanded the warm proceedings of the heads against him, and told them that "as good and as ancient were of another judgment," and that "they might punish him, but it would be for well-doing."
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 280.

And every now and then he [Sir Roger] inquires how such an one's wife or mother, or son, or father do, whom he does not see at church; which is understood as a secret reprimand to the person that is absent.—Spectator, No. 112.

The being not only tied, but knit to her people was her aim; and she [Queen Elizabeth] pursued this great point of view on all occasions; the least, as well as the greatest; and even on those where she thought it necessary to refuse or to reprimand.
Bolingbroke. Remarks on the History of England.

RE-PRINT, v. } Print, (qv.), Lat. Premere, REPRINT, n. } to press.

To print again, (sc.) letters or characters; to mark or infix again; to re-impress.

Reprint, n. is in common use.

Doctor Reynolds, in his preface to his six Theses, and in his overthrow of stage-plays thoroughout. Printed 1599, and now reprinted 1629.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. p. 358.

My design in reprinting it is, to let the reader see what the comment is which I so frequently refer to.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 314.

The whole business of our redemption is, in short, only to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to re-print God's image upon the soul, and (as it were) to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition.—South, vol. i. Ser. 12.

RE-PRISE, v. } Fr. Repris, from reprandre, REPRISE. } to take back, (see REPRIEVE, REPRISE. } PRISE, COMPRISE, &c.)

To take back again or in return; to seize in return; to retake, to resume, to restore, to receive, to repay.

— And eke also Pride is the cause of all wo,
That all the worlde ne maie suffice
To stanche of pride the reprise.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

But humblesse is all other wise,
Whiche most is worth, and no reprise
It taketh agein, but softe and faire
If ony thing stant in contraire,
With humble speche it is redressed.—Id. Ib.

For loue is euer of some reprise
To hym that woll his loue holde. Id. Ib. b. v.

But they were repyred and sent vnto the Tower of London, where they remayned long after, but at the last were deliuered.—Grafton. Edw. I. an. 13.

— Wherefore he now begunne
To challenge her anew, as his owne prize,
Whom formerly he had in battell wonne,
And proffer made by force her to reprise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

As now ye might reprise the armes Sarpedon forfeited,
By forfeit of your rights to him; would you but lend your hands,
And force Patroclus to your Troy?
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatening floods and inundations near;
If so, a just reprise would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

This gentleman being very desirous, as it seems, to make reprisals upon me, undertakes to furnish out a whole section of gross misrepresentation made by me in my quotations.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. c. 4. p. 83.

— She that asks
Her dear five hundred friends, contemns them all,
And hates their coming. They (what can they less?)
Make just reprisals; and with cringe and shrug,
And bow obsequious, hide their hate of her.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

In this case letters of marque and reprisal (words used as synonymous; and signifying, the latter a taking in return, the former the passing the frontiers in order to such taking) may be obtained, in order to seize the bodies or goods of the subjects of the offending state, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

RE-PRIVATE, seems used antithetically to republic.

Mic. The world is full of vanity; and fond fools
Promise themselves a name from building churches,
Or any thing that tends to the republic;
'Tis the reprivate that I study for.
Randolph. The Muse's Looking Glass, Act iii. sc. 1.

May it not be from A. S. Price-an, pungere, stimulate?

To charge with any thing disgraceful, discreditable, shameful, or dishonourable; to revile, to upbraid.

Ne my declared foo wrought me all this reproche.
Surrey. Ps. 55.

And I among the rest, which wrote this weary song,
Must nedes alledge in my defence, that thou hast done me wrong.
For if in simple verse I chaunc'd to touch thy name,
And toucht the same without reproch, was I therefore to blame?
Gascoigne. The Fruite of Foes.

And more ouer (whiche is moch to be meruayled at) he also prohybited that any thinge shuld be red or spoken, reprocheable or blasphemous to God.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 2.

Others vse those venomous Germaine rimes to the vprading of our nation, and from hence borow their scoffes, and reprochfull taunts to the debasing of vs Islanders.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 585.

What hathe the people so mutche offended you, that you should either so scornfully and so reprochfully reporte of them?—Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, pt. i. p. 32.

And this mannes humanitee and curteous behaueour wherewith ye ought to haue been prouoked vnto better waies, ye turne into an occasion of slaundersous reprochefulnessse.
Udal. Luke, c. 7.

Consenting to the safe-guard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit: else imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
And choake your good to come.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

And, ever as she went, her tounge did walke
In fowle reproche and termes of vile despyght, Provoking him, by her outrageous talke,
To heape more vengeance on that wretched wight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

Full of disdainfull wrath, he fierce uprose
For to revenge that fowle reprochefull shame,
And snatching his bright sword began to close
With her on foot, and stoutly forward came.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

But most of them were tongues of mortall men,
Which spake reprochfully, not caring where nor when.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 12.

The noxious plant, and savage animal,
Which you the earth's reproch and blemish call.
Blackmore. Creation, b. iii.

Forbear, ye Chiefs! reproachful to contend;
Much would you blame, should others thus offend:
And lo! th' approaching steeds your contest end.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

By the Son of Man, we are to understand our Lord Jesus Christ; and to speak a word against him, will be to talk slightly and reproachfully of him.—Sharp, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

The monarch, sensible of the importance of this fortress, [Meziers,] and of the danger to which it was exposed, committed the defence of it to the Chevalier Bayard, distinguished among his contemporaries by the appellation of the Knight without fear, and without reproach.
Robertson. Charles V. b. ii.

REPROBATE, v. } See TO REPROVE. Lat.
REPROBATE, adj. } Reprobare,— REPROBATE, n. } To prove against, to REPROBATION. } give, or bear testimony,
REPROBATIONER. } or witness, pass sentence,
REPROBATER. } against; to disown, to reject, to abandon; to reprehend, to condemn.

Declare them firste of al to the worlde, to be the reprobate veselles of dyshonoure, which of wyfulness contemneth my eternall verytie.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

The carnal multitude, the wise mē of this world, the very reprobates frō God, all drye without the true faith, dranke vp this filthy water.—Id. Ib.

I wyll not seke to call the back, no more than the Holy Ghost doth in that place, for ye labour were all in wayne, thū beinge a vessell of reprobacion.—Id. Apol. fol. 14. Pref.

Not like our sons of zeal, who, to reform
Their hearers, fiercely at the pulpit storm,
And beat the cushion into worse estate,
Than if they did conclude it reprobate.
Elegy upon the Author.

How unlikely is it that Justin should own such reprobates as those Ebionites were for fellow Christians!
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 204.

To say nothing of Harsnet's sermon at St. Paul's Cross, in 1584, and of Hooker's at the Temple, in the year 1585, both contemning absolute reprobation.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 377.

I never knew any of the Geneva or Scotch model (which sort of sanctified reprobationers we abound with) either use or like this way of preaching in my life; but generally whips and scorpions, wrath and vengeance, fire and brimstone, made both top and bottom, front and rear, first and last, of all their discourses.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

John, Duke of Argyle, the patriotic reprobater of French modes.—Noble. Continuation of Grainger, vol. iii. p. 490.

And doth he reprobate, and will he damn
The use of his own bounty? Cowper. Task, b. v.

They divide this central mansion of the dead into two distinct regions, for the separate lodging of the souls of the righteous and the reprobate.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

RE-PRODUCE, v. } Fr. Reproduire; It. Riprodurre; Lat. Re, REPRODU'CER. } and producere, to lead,
REPRODU'CTION. } draw, or bring forth.

To produce, or bring, or bear forth again; to yield again.

Food that his inborn courage might control,
Extinguish all the father in his soul,
And for his Estian race, and Saxon strain,
Might reproduce some second Richard's reign.
Dryden. Britannia Rediviva.

These mighty concussions of Nature, especially that of the universal conflagration, puts an end to all the race of mankind and all living bodies, though in the reintegration of the world after these destructions there is also a re-production of mankind, but not by the ordinary method of propagation as now.—Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 217.

The experiment recorded by our author about the reproduction of salt-petre, is the best and successfulest I have ever been able to make upon bodies, that require a strong heat to dissipate them.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 61.

How a person once annihilated could be reproduced, so as to be the same person which had formerly existed, when no principle of sameness, nothing necessarily permanent, was supposed to enter the original composition, was but ill explained.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

You understand, to be sure, that I speak of Charles Townshend, officially the re-producer of this fatal scheme.
Burke. On American Taxation.

Death was represented as an utter extinction of the whole man; and the evangelical doctrine of a resurrection of the body in an improved state, to receive again its immortal inhabitant, was heightened into the mystery of a reproduction of the annihilated person.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

And though it increases the consumption of the society, it provides a permanent fund for supporting that consumption; the people who consume re-producing, with a profit, the whole value of their annual consumption.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. c. 5.

The labourers and labouring cattle, therefore, employed in agriculture, not only occasion, like the workmen in manufactures, the reproduction of a value equal to their own consumption, or to the capital which employs them, together with its owner's profits, but of a much greater value.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

Amid all the admirable contrivances of nature, for the reproduction of the species of all the myriads of organized nature, where shall we behold any for that of the same individual.—Fellowes. Christian Philosophy, p. 246.

REPROMISSION. (From re, and promittere, to promise, qv.) By this word Wiclif renders the Lat. Repromissiones, (Gr. Επαγγελιας,) the Mod. Vers.—the promises.

But he whos generacioun is not noumbrid in hem took fithis of Abraham, and he blesside this Abraham which hadde repromysiouns.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 7.

Gynecia, to whom the fearful agonies she still lived in made any small reproval sweet, did quickly find her words falling to a better way of comfort.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

I may, sometimes, reprouers' deedes reproue,
And sing a verse, to make them see themselves.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

Not suffering the least winckling sleep to start
Into her eye, which th' heart mote have relieved;
But if the least appeared, her eyes she streight repreived.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

What sure I weene the hardest hart of stone
Would hardly finde to aggravate her griefe:
For misery craves rather mercy then reprise.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 8.

Bob. Sir, believe me, upon my relation, for what I tell you the world shall not reprove.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. 2.

My lord of Suffolk, Buckingham, and Yorke, Reprove my allegation if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectual.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

These are such things which if men will stand to defend, possibly a modest reprover may be more ashamed than an impudent offender.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

Reprove of words the too-affected sound.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

If indeed men had no passions, or had so mortified their passions, that they were rarely earnest or zealous about any thing; their unconcernedness for religion, and the things of God, might be the less reprovable.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Who gives his tongue a loose so bold and vain,
Censures my conduct, and reproves my reign :
Lifts up his thought against me from the dust,
And tells the world's Creator what is just.
Young. A Paraphrase on Job.

In the numerous tribe of polite vices, there are still some higher in the fashion than others, and therefore capable of a livelier defence, and deserving of a stronger ridicule on the reprover.—Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 22.

RE-PRUNE, v. To prune again, (lit. and met.)

In mid-way flight imagination tires;
Yet soon re-prunes her wing to soar anew.
Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

Water young planted trees, and layers, &c. and reprune

Come wing'd abroad; by the light air upborn, Lighter, and full of soul. Thomson. Summer.

It would be the highest folly and arrogance in the reptile Man to imagine that he, by any of his endeavours, could add to the glory of God, with whom essentially dwells all power and perfection for evermore.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 7.

An inadvertent step may crush the snail,
That crawls at ev'ning in the public path;
But he that has humanity, forwarn'd,
Will tread aside and let the reptile live.
Cowper. Task b. vi.

RE-PUBLICK, n. } Fr. République; It.
REPU'BLCAN, adj. } Repubblica; Sp. Repub- REPU'BLCAN, n. } lica; Lat. Res-publica, REPU'BLCANISM. } the public state or condition; the public weal; the common-wealth.

The common or public wealth, or good; also applied to a form of government, in which the commonalty exercise the legislative and executive power, either immediately or by officers by them chosen and appointed; to the people or state who live under such a form of government.

Thus having both such courage and such might,
As to so great a bus'ness did belong,
Neither yet think by their unnatural fight
What the republic suffer'd them among.
Dayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

The town and republick of St. Marino stands on the top of a very high and craggy mountain.—Addison. Italy.

Such a chimerical happiness is not peculiar to republicans, for we find the subjects of the most absolute prince in Europe are as proud of their monarch as the Lucquese of being subject to none.—Id. Ib.

A republican government is that in which the body, or only a part of the people, is possessed of the supreme power.
Montesquieu. Spirit of Laws, b. ii. c. 1.

His political notions were those of an acrimonious and surlly republican, for which it is not known that he gave any better reason than that a popular government was the most frugal; for the trappings of a monarchy would set up an ordinary commonwealth.—Johnson. Life of Milton.

Milton's republicanism was, I am afraid, founded in an envious hatred of greatness, and a sullen desire of independence; in petulance impatient of control, and pride disdainful of superiority.—Id. Ib.

RE-PUBLISH, v. } To publish again; to REPU'BLSHER. } present again to, lay REPUBLICA'TION. } again before, the public, the people.

The booke is extant (published by warrant, and re-pub- lished by command this present yeare) of the proceedings at that conference, which will averre all that I say for truth against you here.—Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, c. 4.

What now has our rational republisher to oppose to this modest apology for Ismaelism?
Warburton. Doctrine of Grace, b. iii. c. 3.

This shews the extreme folly of what hath been asserted by certain of our unwary friends, and echoed back to us by the enemies of our holy faith, that the gospel itself is only a republication of the religion of nature.

Id. Divine Legation, b. ix. c. 3.

The republication of a former will revokes one of a later date, and establishes the first again.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 32.

REP

REPUDIATE, v. } Fr. Repudier; It. Repudiare; Lat. Repudiare; repudium, a pudore, quia fit ob rem pudendam, or—quia renunciatio non fit sine pudore. See Vossius.

To put away, to separate from; to forsake, to reject, (especially one to whom we are married or wedded.) See the quotation from Montesquieu.

Edmond was elder brother to kynge Edward the first; and for his deformite repudiat and put by from the croune royall.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

By whiche treatie he had the lady deliuered in hys possession and after her deliuerance, he refusing and repudiating the mariage of y^e lady Margaret, daughter to the forsayd kyng of Romanes.—Id. Hen. VII. an. 3.

For this Antiochus repudiated his own wyfe called Laodice, mother to Seleuco Callinico and to Antioche Hierax and married Bernicen. Which maryage and repudiation or diuorce from his firste wyfe was the occasion of greate mischief and murther.—Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 11.

With this my sword I will maintain, that they are most wicked traitors to their country, who out of a simulation of a fond religion, or shew of preposterous caution, shall give contrary advise, neither shall resolve that servitude is to be repudiated with greater care by us, then domination is effected by them.—Prynne. Sovereigne Power, pt. iv. p. 62.

His separation from Terentia, whom he repudiated not long afterward, was perhaps an affliction to him at this time. Bolingbroke. Reflections upon Exile.

The crime indeed which justifies divorce is too frequent; but the husband is not at liberty, as in ancient times, to repudiate the wife of his youth for any lighter cause than an offence on her part against the fundamental principle of the nuptial contract.—Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 40.

There is this difference between a divorce and a repudiation, that a divorce is made by a mutual consent, occasioned by a mutual antipathy; while a repudiation is made by the will, and for the advantage of one of the two parties, independently of the will and advantage of the other. Montesquieu. Spirit of Laws, b. xv. c. 15.

REPUGN, v. } Fr. Répugner; It. Ripugnare; Sp. Repugnar; Lat. Repugnare, (re, and pugnare, to fight.)
REPUGNABLE.
REPUGNANT.
REPUGNANCE.
REPUGNANCY.
REPUGNANTLY.
REPUGNER. } To fight against, to repel or drive back, to resist, to withstand, to place or set against, to oppose; to be contrary to, to contradict, to be contradictory to, uncomplying with.

For if this counsell either werk is of men it schal be undone, but if it is of God ghe moun not undo hem lest peraventure ghe be foundun to repugne God. Wiclif. Dedis, c. 5.

It seemeth (quod I) to repugnen and to contrarie greatlie, that God knoweth beforne all thynges, and that there is any fredome or libertie, for if so bee that God looketh all thynges beforne, ne God ne maie not been deceued in no maner. Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

All lawes or custome, or els constitution by vsage, or wryting, contrarien law of kinde, vtterly ben repugnaunt and aduersary to our Goddes wil of heuen. Id. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

And so with these thynges well considered, it is open at the fulle, that without all maner repugnaunce, God beforne wote al maner thynges been doen by frewill.—Id. Ib.

Of this ensample let al cristen kings hauig sicke victoryes seke out the counsels of the godly lerned trwe prechers of the worde and afir their doctrine and counsells order their comon policyes and chirches so that their constitucions and actis repugne not the gospel of Cryste. Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 5.

Wherefore it semeth, that it, wherein the one deliteth, is repugnat to the other's nature: and where is any repugnaunce, may be none amitie, sens frendeshyp is an entier consent of wylls and desires. Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 11.

For the great power and omnipotencie of God excludeth that repugnaunce, whiche mannes reason would deame of Christes departyng from this worlde, and placyng his humanitie in the glorie of his father. Bp. Gardner. Explic. of the True Fayth, fol. 4.

Item, such goods as were left to be distributed in godlie uses, after the arbitrement of executors, by the wils of the dead, or were not in their wils deputed to anie certeine places or persons named, nor yet were bestowed by the said executors to the foresaid uses, they should collect to the vse and subsidie aforesaid and giue certificat to the see apostolike of the quantitie thereof, excommunicating all repugnans and rebellers against the same.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 264.

REP

She answe'red him, well fits this high desire
Thy noble heart, yet cannot I consent
For heau'n's decree, firme, stable and intire,
Thy wish repugnes, and 'gainst thy will is bent.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xv. s. 39.

When stubbornly he did repugne the truth,
About a certaine question in the law,
Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke and him:
With other vile and ignominious tearmes.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 1.

And the demonstration proving it so exquisitely, with wonderfull reason and facility, as it is not repugnable.
North. Plutarch, p. 262.

1 Player. — His anticke sword
Rebellious to his arme, lyes where it falls, Repugnant to command.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

Those ill counsellors have most unhappily engaged him in such pernicious proiects and frequent repugnances of workes and words, as have given both parliament and people a more then colourable if not iust occasion to distrust his maiesties gracious words and promises for the present.
Prynne. Sovereigne Power, pt. ii. p. 40.

To dispute and reason of every severall kind, were an endless peece of worke, and so intricat, as I wot not how a man should rid himselfe out of it, if he were once entred; so repugnant and contrarie are the physicians one to another in that argument.—Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. b. xxiii.

They speak not repugnantly thereto.
Brown. Vulgar Errors.

If thyngs in themselves evil, repugnant to the principles of humane nature, and those of civil societies, as well as to the precepts of Christianity, are made lawfull only for the carrying on their design, we need not go farther to examine them; for by these fruits we may know them.
Stillingefleet, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

Plutarch complains heavily of the repugnances of the Stoics: and in his tract so intitled, accuses Chrysippus, now, for laughing at the doctrine of a future state of rewards and punishments, as a Marmo, fit only to frighten women and children; and now again, for affirming seriously that, let men laugh as they pleased, the thing was a sober truth.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 2.

For it is repugnancy of objects to what we have ordinarily seen or known that renders them inconceivable, and therefore familiarity may make them easy to our apprehension.
Search. Light of Nature, b. i. pt. i. c. 14.

RE-PULLULATE, v. "Fr. Répulluler, to reburgeon or bud out again," (Cotgrave.) See PULLULATE.

Though tares repullulate, there is wheat still left in the field.—Howell. Voc. For.

REPULSE. See REPEL.

RE-PURCHASE, v. To purchase or acquire, gain or win again.

King. Once more we sit in England's royall throne,
Re-purchase'd with the blood of enemies:
What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corne,
Hauē we mow'd downe in tops of all their pride?
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Henry VI. Act v. sc. 7.

RE-PURIFY, v. To purify, (Lat. Purus; Gr. Πυρ, fire,) or cleanse, or clear, (q.d. by fire,) again.

Come; when the day takes any winke from night,
Let's to the riuer, and repurifye
Thy wedding garments.—Chapman. Homer. Odys. b. vi.
And which is worse, my soul is now denied
Her transport to the sweet Elysian rest,
The joyfull bliss for ghosts repurified,
The ever-springing gardens of the bless'd.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

REPUTE, v. } Fr. Réputer; It. Riputare;

REPUTELESS. } sideration.

To hold or keep in consideration; to esteem or estimate, to account, to regard, to respect.

For which he held his glory and his renown
At no value or reputation.
Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12, 489.

Yet in our myndes we consideire what they be made, and do repute and esteeme them, and haue them in reuerence accordyng to the same thynges, that they be taken for.
Bp. Gardner. Expos. of the True Fayth, fol. 45.

Many of our kings comming to the crowne without just hereditary title, by the kingdome's, peere's, and people's free election, onely confirmed by subsequent acts of parliament, which was then reputed a sufficient right and title.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. i. p. 56.

REQ

It is not a little worth the memorie, to the commendation of the gentlemen and souldiers herein, who leauing all reputation apart, with so great willingnesse and with couragious stomackes, haue themselves almost ouercome in so short a time the difficultie of this so great a labour.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 72.

A miserable estate of ours, a time most worthy bewayleing, into the which most vnfortunately our deare and holy mother, the church, the spouse of Christ, is fallen, whiche doth nowe so little esteeme the moste precious blood of her most loueyng spouse, Jesus Christ: yea, and lyke an inchaunted woman, nothyng regardeth nor reputeth of any moment, that most excellent pryce, wherewith she was so exceddyng louynglye and dearly redeemed.
Fisher. A Godlye Treatise. The Third Reason.

For now the rebel, thus forborn, grows strong,
Both in his reputation and success.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

But this prozer Dionysius, and the rest of these grave and reputatively learned, dare undertake for their gravities the headstrong censure of all thyngs.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, Ep. Ded.

Had I so lauish of my presence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheape to vulgar company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the crowne,
Had still kept loyall to possession,
And left me in reputelesse banishment,
A fellow of no marke, nor likelyhood.
Shakespeare. Henry IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

Thou thought'st it base to build on poore remaines
Of noble blood, which ranne in others' veines;
As many doe, who beare no flowres, nor fruite,
But shew dead stocks, which haue beene of repute.
Beaumont. To Lady Marqu. of Winchester.

If you ask Tertullian how Father and Son can be reputed one God, he tells you in the chapter before, and in that very passage which the Doctor quotes, that it is by unity of substance, and original.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 58.

O father, first for prudence in repute,
Tell, with that eloquence so much thy own,
What thou hast heard.—Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xi.

They cannot part from them, [their sins,] but they must part from that which is extremely either pleasant or profitable or reputable, or some way or other conducing to their ease and conveniency.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 18.

To many such worthy magistrates as these, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse.
Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Reputation is the greatest engine, by which those who are possessed of power must make that power serviceable to the ends and uses of government.—Id. Ib.

RE-QUEST, v. } Fr. Requēte, requérir; REQUE'ST, n. } Sp. Requestar; Lat. Requisitum, past part. of re-quirere, REQUE'STER. } (re, and querere, to ask or seek for,) to seek again for (sc.) carefully, as a thing needed or valued.

To ask or seek for, to beseech, to entreat, to petition, to sue for, to solicit. See REQUIRE.

To be in request,—to be sought after or desired. Request differs in degree from require and requisite, (qqv.)

Out of the ground a fury infernal sterte,
From Pluto sent, at requeste of Saturne,
For which his hors for fere gan to turne,
And lepte aside, and foundred as he lepe.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2687.

This lorde hath graunted his requeste.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Faith is the trust in Christes blood, and is the gift of God, Ephes. ii. whereunto a man is drawn of the goodnesse of God, and driuen thorow true knowledge of the lawe, and of beholding his deedes in the lust and desire of the members vnto the request of the lawe, and with seing his owne dampnation in the glasse of the lawe.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 225.

And vntill setting of saile aboard the ship, requesting him to accepte the same in good part as a testimonie and witness of their good hearts, zeale and tendernesse towards him and his countrey.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 288.

And, if he chauce come when I am abroad,
Sperre the yate fast, for fear of fraude;
Ne for all his worst, nor for his best,
Open the dore at his request.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. May.

The earnestness of the requester teacheth the petitioned to be suspicious; and suspicion teaches him how to hold, and fortify.—Junius. Sin stigmatized, p. 748.

My ship equipp'd within the neighbouring port
The prince, departing from the Pylian court, Requested for his speed.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

RE-QUICKEN, v. To quicken again; to revive, to re-animate.

REQ

When by and by the dinne of warre gan pierce
His readie sence: then straight his doubled spirit
Requickned what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battaille came he.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

RE'QUIEM. } Lat. Requies, rest; Lat. of REQUI'ETORY. } Lower Ages, Requietorium, a place of rest.

Requiem,—a mass for the dead, the beginning of which is Requiem æternam, (Du Cange.)

Yet in the conclusion (they say) he deliuered kinge Edwine's soule, after he was dead, from hel (I pray God he killed hym not afore) and vanquished all the deuils there by vertue of a requiem masse, so bringing him into theyr purgatory.—Bale. Volaries, pt. i.

The doleful Muses thinking now to write
Sad elegies, their tears confound their sight:
But him t' Elysium's lasting joys they bring,
Where winged angels his sad requiems sing.
Cowley. The Elegy on Mr. R. Clarke.

The bodies are not only despoiled of all outward funerall

He would not once have moved for the knight;
They him saluted, standing far afore;
Who, well them greeting, humbly did requight,
And asked, to what end they clomb that tedious hight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Sayd then Sir Scudamour, Sir salvage knight,
Let me this crave, sith first I was defyde,
That first I may that wrong to him requite:
And, if I hap to fayle, you shall recure my right.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

Guard them, and him within protect from harm.
He can requite thee, for he knows the charme
That call fame on such gentle deeds as these,
And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Milton, son. 8.

A small requital for so great ado,
Is this poor present breath, a smoke soon gone;
Or these dumb stones, erected for our sake:
Which formeless heaps few stormy changes make.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

They find they had condemned themselves, when they so readily passed so severe a sentence upon those husbandmen, who had so ill requited the lord of the vineyard for all the care he had taken about it, that, instead of sending him the fruits of it, they abuse his messengers, and at last murder his son.—Stillington, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Every receiver is debtor to his benefactor; he owes him all the good he receives from him; and is always obliged to a thankful acknowledgement, and whenever he hath opportunity to an equivalent requital.

To wish health to again; to greet again, or return a greeting or welcome.

And thereafter he saw his unclouded eyes weakly strive to shine again; thus first re-saluting the light, O where am I?—Sidney. Pembroke's Arcadia, b. iii.

Then up she rose fraught with melancholy,
And forth into the lower parts did pas,
Whereas the priests she found full busily
About their holy things for morrow mas;
Whom she saluting faire, faire resaluted was.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

Ere once the sweet-fac'd boy (now all forlorne)
Came with his pipe to resolute the morne.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 3.

RE/SCAT, v. } Sp. Rescatar, rescat, to ran-
RE/SCAT, n. } som, to rescue, (qv.)

We had great trouble in our journey, for that euery day wee were taken prisoners, by reason of the great dissension in that kingdom: and euery morning at our departure we must pay rescat foure or fife pagies a man.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 222.

Give me leave to congratulate your happy return from the Levant, and the great honor you haue acquir'd by your gallant comportment in Algier, in re-escating so many English slaves.—Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 30.

RESCIND, n. } Fr. Rescinder; Lat. Rescin- RESCISSION. } dere, to cut off, (re, and scin- RESCISSION. } dere, Gr. σχίζω, to cut off.)
To cut or lop off; and, consequentially, to destroy, (sc.) the validity, the force or obligation;
to annul, to repeal.

Contrarily, the great gifts of the king are judged void, his unnecessary expences are rescinded, his superfluous cut off.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, p. 168. App.

If any man infer upon the words of the prophet following, which declare this rejection, and, to use the words of the text, rescission of their estate to have been for their idolatry, that by this reason the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, which is manifestly untrue, in my judgment it followeth not.—Bacon. Of an Holy War.

If Caius sell to Mævius sheep which he affirms to be sound, but they are indeed rotten, the law permits not rescission of the bargain, but forces Caius to restore so much of the price as the sheep were overvalued.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1. Rule 6.

St. Lewis and the rest were constrained to yield to the rescissory petitions of their subjects who complained that the restraint of open combats occasioned multitudes of hidden murders.—Selden. Duello, c. 4.

Whence it seems to follow that the same authority that appointed that, might, if they please, rescind or alter it.
Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

So Primrose proposed, but half in jest as he assured me, that the better and shorter way would be to pass a general act rescissory, (as it was called,) annulling all the parliaments that had been held since the year 1633, during the whole time of the war, as faulty and defective in their constitution.—Burnet. Own Time. Charles II. an. 1661.

We read of no subsequent decree of the apostolical college rescinding the restriction which, by the act of their first assembly, they thought proper to impose.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

RESCRIBE, v. } Fr. Rescrire, rescript; It. Re'script. } Rescrivere, rescritto; Sp. Rescribir; Lat. Rescribere, to write back, (re, and scrib-ere.)

To write back, to write in answer or return.

And the kinge with publyk rescript and open recatacion confessinge his synne setteth forth the glory of God.
Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 6.

Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back toleramus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

This is the ground of that notable rescript of the emperor Theodosius to the Roman senate; which proves the Roman emperours to have no right nor power to declare or make lawes, but by the senate's concurring assent and approbation.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. i. p. 4.

When any doubt arose upon the construction of the Roman laws, the usage was to state the case to the emperor in writing, and take his opinion upon it. The answers of the emperor were called his rescripts.
Blackstone. Commentaries, Introd.

RE/SCUE, v. } Fr. Rescourre, recourir; It. RE/SCUE, n. } Riscuotere. The Low Lat. RE/SCUER. } Rescussa, rescussio, rescussus, RE/SCUELESS. } recuperatio; Fr. Rescousse, quod qui rem recuperat, post eum recurrat, qui hanc aufert, (Du Cange.)

To catch, capture, or take again; to retake, to reseize, to deliver from captivity, from danger; to redeliver, to restore to liberty or safety.

— Friend forsooth I thanke thee,
That thou hast liked me to rescow.

To Troie, in rescous of the towne. Id. Ib. b. v.

Thē were the sayde foure galeys soone beclepyd wt' ye Englysshe nauye, and so cruelly assaylyd y^t they were borden or they myght be rescowed.—Fabyan, an. 1341.

So that in onely kneling and kissing (as saith ye reskewer and kouerer of the Romish foxe) there cā be no idolatry.
Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 3.

For a shifte the rescuers (which within the citie were readie for all sudden aduentures) were sent to the wals.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 688.

Put to your hands, therefore, to rescue now
Th' endanger'd State (dear lords) from this disgrace,
And let us in our honour labour how
To bring this scorned land in better case.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Full litle wanted, but he had him slaine,
And of the battell balefull end had made,
Had not his gentle squire beheld his paine,
And commen to his reskew ere his bitter bane.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

Outstripping so the man-feade horse,
He topled ore his side
The monstrous king, that rescuesse
To flying people cride.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 12.

What encouragement doth God hereby give to others to repent, when Nineveh was rescued from the very brink of destruction by it?—Stillingfleet, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

His fruitless words are lost unheard in air,
Ulysses seeks the ships, and shelters there.
But bold Tydides to the rescue goes,
A single warrior 'midst a host of foes.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

I have been careful that Theodora should not be made to do any thing that, the great obligations she had to her rescuer considered, do intrench either upon her piety or her virtue, or so much as upon her reservedness.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 257.

In their way thither they may be rescued by the owner, in case the distress was taken without cause, or contrary to law; as if no rent be due; if they were taken upon the highway, or the like; in these cases the tenant may lawfully make rescue.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

RE-SEARCH, v. } To search or seek again
RESEAR/CH, n. } and again, carefully, diligently, studiously; to inspect carefully, to examine, to investigate.

I have been the more desirous to research, with some diligence, the several passages of the said journey, and the particular accidents of any moment in their way.

Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 212.

There must go before a main research, whether the child that I am to manage be of a good nature or no.
Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 85.

Nature, the handmaid of God Almighty, doth nothing but with good advice, if we make researches into the true reason of things.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 6.

Let me take warning, lesson'd to distill,
And, imitating Heav'n, draw good from ill.
Nor let these great researches in my breast
A monument of useless labour rest.

Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

RE-SEAT, v. To seat again, (A. S. Settan or Sittan.) to replace in the seat.

When he's produc'd, as soon he will among you:
Speak, what will you adventure to reseat him
Upon his father's throne?

Dryden. The Spanish Friar, Act v.

RE-SECT, v. To cut again, to cut off.
Lat. Sec-are, to cut.

— I ought reject
No soul from wicked immortalitie,
But give them durance when they are resect
From organized corporeitie.

More. Song of the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 2. s. 46.

RE-SEIZE, v. } Fr. Re-saisir, to seize again;
RESEIZURE. } to hold or take hold of again;
to repossess.

In wretched prison long he did remaine,
Till they out-raigned had their utmost date,
And then therein reseized was againe.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Nauar hath meanes to haue Nauar,
And when shall God so please,
The rightfull heire of Portugale
His empyre shall re-seaze.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 48.

I moved to have a reseizure of the lands of George More, a relapsed recusant, a fugitive, and a practising traitor.

Bacon. Letter to Cecil.

Then the king first found he was circumvented with false reports of the baron's disloyalty, who so willingly restored his castles to him when those stormes were blowne over; though he made but ill use of it, and took occasion thence openly to recede from his oath; whereupon they reseized those castles for their safety.

Prynne. Sovereign Power, pt. ii. p. 19.

RESEMBLE, v. } Fr. Resembler; It. Ras-
RESE/MBLABLE. } somigliare; Lat. Simulare,

RESE/MBLANCE. } present a similarity or RESE/MBLER. } likeness.
RESE/MBLINGLY. } To present or possess a likeness, like appearances or qualities; to liken, to be like.

"Many resemblances to her he made," (Spenser;) i.e. he did many things representing the semblance or likeness of one who loved.

These arrowes that I speake of here,
Were all five on one mannere,
And all were they resemblable.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

But well I wote the speare with euery naile
Thirled my soule by inward resemblaunce,
Which neuer shall out of my remembraunce.

Id. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalene.

Men tellen that the maladie,
Whiche cleped is hydropsie,
Resembled is vnto this vice.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For man of soule reasonable,
Is to an angell resemblable.—Id. Ib. Prol.

For as the philosopher tolde
Of golde and siluer thei ben holde
Two principall extremittees,
To whiche all other by degrees
Of the metalles ben accordant,
And so throughe kinde resemblant.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

— Of foules there is one,
Whiche hath a face of bloode and bone,
Like to a man in resemblance. Id. Ib. b. iii.

The rusticity in clowns that he [Aristophanes] resembleth is not natural but affected and foolish.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 774.

And th' other, al yclad in garments light,
Discolour'd like to womanish disguise,
He did resemble to his lady bright;
And ever his faint hart much earned at the sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

Then beautie, which was made to represent
The great Creatour's own resemblance bright, Unto abuse of lawlesse lust was lent,
And made the baite of bestiall delight.

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 8.

His caytive thought durst not so high aspire:
But with soft sighes and lovely semblaunces
He ween'd that his affection entire
She should aread; many resemblaunces
To her he made, and many kinde remembraunces.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

And surely it was no delight and pleasure that he sought herein to content the tooth, but only that he would have the name to eat the resemblers of man's voice.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 51.

Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,
As bodies nourish'd with resembling food.

Dryden. Astraea Redux.

To do good is to become most like to God. It is that which of all other qualities gives us the resemblance of his nature and perfection.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Tartar is a body by itself, that has few resemblers in the world.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 516.

Our creed proclaims him the Creator of heaven and earth; the angel that holds the book, in the Revelations, describes him resemblingly.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 402.

RE-SEMINATE, v. To produce again by seed. Lat. Seminare.

Concerning its [Phoenix] generation, that without all conjunction it begets and resemimates it self, hereby we introduce a vegetable production in animals, and unto sensible natures transfer the propriety of plants.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 12.

RE-SEND, v. To send back again.

— I sent to her
By this same coxcombe that we haue i' th' winde
Tokens and letters, which she did resend,
And this is all I haue done.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 6.

RESENT, v. } Fr. Ressentir; It. Risentirsi; RESE/NTER. } Sp. Resentir; Lat. Re, and RESE/NTFUL. } sentire, to feel or think again;
RESE/NTINGLY. } and again to reflect the mind
RESE/NTIVE. } upon.
RESE/NTIMENT. } To feel sensibly, to have a RESE/NTMENT. } strong sense or feeling of: as now usually applied, to feel an angry remembrance or recollection.

See the quotation from Cogan for the restricted modern usage; and those from More, Barrow, Cudworth and Bull for former usages.

There are many here shrink in their shoulders, and are very sensible of his departure, and the lady infant resents it more than any; she hath caus'd a mass to be sung every day ever since for his good voyage: the Spaniards themselves confess that there was never princess so bravely wood'd.—Howell, b. i. Let. 25.

In the sensitive part of their natures, the earl [of Essex,] was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace.

Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 175.

Nor can I secure myself from seeming deficient to him that more resentingly considers the usefulness of that treatise, [enthusiasm,] in that I have not added another of superstition.—More. Philosophical Writings, Gen. Pref.

For though this king might have resentment
And will t' avenge him of this injury,
Yet at that time his state being turbulent, &c.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Which promptitude is acquired by either the often representations of the same phantasm to her; or else by a more vivid impress of it from its novelty, excellency, mischievousness, or some such like condition that at once will pierce the soul with an extraordinary resentment.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 11.

The good prince king James was afraid where no fear was, and bore dishonourably what he might have resented safely; nay, what he ought to have resented in any circumstances, and at any hazard.

Bolingbroke. Remarks on the History of England.

Honour is that vertue which renders a man upright in all his dealings, and correspondent to all his obligations; a loyal subject to his prince, and a true lover of his country, a candid judge of persons and things, an earnest favourer of whatever is good and commendable, a faithful resenter and requiter of courtesies.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Not but his soul, resentful as humane,
Dooms to full vengeance all the offending train.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

When instant from the keen resentive north,
By long oppression by religion rous'd,
The guardian army came.—Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

So it [prayer] includeth that praise which we should yield to God, implying our due esteem of his most excellent per-fections, most glorious works, most just and wise dispensations of providence and grace; that thanksgiving whereby we should express an affectionate resentment of our obligation to him for the numberless great benefits we receive from him.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

I need take no more pains to purge Empedocles from those two imputations of corporealism and atheism, since he hath so fully confuted them himself, in those fragments of his still extant. First, by expressing such a hearty resentment of the excellency of piety, and the wretchedness and sottishness of atheism in these verses.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 25.

Throughout this excellent song the sacred virgin expresseth a deep sense of her own unworthiness, and upon that account a profound resentment of the singular favour of the Almighty bestowed on her.—Bull, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Resentment is a lesser degree of wrath excited by smaller offences committed against less irritable minds. It is a deep reflective displeasure against the conduct of the offender.

Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. c. 2. s. 3.

RE/SERATING. Lat. Reserare, to open.

There appears no reason, or at least there has been none given, that I know of, why the reserating operation (if I may so speak) of sublimates should be confined to antimony.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 79.

RE-SERVE, v. } Fr. Réserver; It. Reservare; Sp. Reservar; Lat. Reservare, (re, and servare,) to keep back.

These ben wellis withouten watir, and mystis dryuun with whyrlinge wyndis, to whiche the thicke myst of derkenness is reserved.—Wiclif. Petir, c. 2.

And he reseruyde undir derkenesse aungelis that kepten not her prynshood.—Id. Judas, c. 1.

Howbeit, with very few words he lightly touched it, accidentally by the way passing it over; as meaning of likelihood to keep and reserve that to any other place.

Robinson. More. Utopia. Giles to Buslide.

We [Edw. R.] are pleased, that the reservance of our rights and titles, mentioned in our former articles sent to our said commissioners, be in general words.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. No. 50.

Inasmuch that when the duke of Bedford came with the king's letters patent to haue the pope's procurations and reservations admitted; yet the court of parlement would not agree to the same.—Fox. Actes, &c. p. 4.

Why had not we, say they, dy'd with the strong

In foreign fields, in honourable wise,
In just exploits, and noble without wrong;
And by the valiant hand of enemies?
And not thus now reserved in our age,
To home-confusion and disordered rage.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

And though they be outstripp'd by every pen
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme, Exceeded by the height of happier men.—Shakes. son. 31.

The French is more generous in his proceedings, and not so full of scruples, reservations, and jealous as the Spaniard, but deals more frankly, and with a greater confidence and gallantry.—Houell, b. i. Let. 21.

Her looks not let abroad, (but carefully Kept in, restrain'd) held their reservedness:
Observing none but her own dignity,
And his, to whom she did herself address.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

The world is nimble in the anticipating of voices, and for my particular, according to my improvidence in all things else, I am in this likewise no reserver of my good will till the last.—Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 370.

I think I could give a tolerable account of the doctor's great reserve and caution, in not telling the world, plainly, that he had changed his mind.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 283.

You two draw up, with all the speed you may,
Our last reserves, and yet redeem the day.

Dryden. The Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

And yet, ev'n then, she cries, the marriage-vow
A mental reservation must allow;
And there's a silent bargain still imply'd,
The parties should be pleas'd on either side.

Id. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Prosp. Since you will venture,
I charge you bear yourself reservedly to him,
Let him not dare to touch your naked hand,
But keep at distance from him.—Id. The Tempest, Act iii.

Where is that ancient seriousness, and reservedness, and modesty, that heretofore has been thought not only essential to the spirit of a Christian, but natural to the temper of an Englishman.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

In this same decree, which so remarkably reserves the abstinence from blood, the Sabbath is not at all reserved as a thing either of necessity or expedience.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

Then to her children thus, the silence broke,
Without reserve she, deeply sighing, spoke.

Cooke. Hesiod. The Theogony.

When a landed estate, therefore, is sold with a reservation of a perpetual rent, if it is intended that this rent should always be of the same value, it is of importance to the family in whose favour it is reserved, that it should not consist in a particular sum of money.—Smith. Wealth of Nat. b. i. c. 5.

The view of these sacks made us to think, that they might well be the reservoirs, where Pliny says, that camels do a long time keep the water which they drink in great abundance when they meet with it, to supply the wants which they may have thereof in the dry deserts, wherein they are used to travel.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii. § 3.

RE/SERVOIR. Fr. Réservoir. See RESERVE.

A place where any thing is reserved, or kept in store.

Drains from its thirsty bounds the springs of wealth,
His own insatiate reservoir to fill.—Thomson. Liberty, pt. v.

—Has not God
Still wrought by means since first he made the world?
And did He not of old employ His means
To drown it? What is His creation less Than a capacious reservoir of means, Form'd for His use, and ready at His will?

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

The vast reservoir, in seasons of drought (for to the vicissitudes of immoderate rains and drought the climate was liable) supplied the city and the adjacent country with water.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 29.

RE-SE/TTLE, v. } Settle, (qv.) dim. of RE-SE/TTLEMENT. } set.

To set, to put or place, (sc. at rest,) again; to compose, to confirm again; to fix or establish again; to sink to rest, (as particles in motion, floating,) to the bottom; to subside—again.

The Winchester book: being a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden: whenceforth we may account a full re-settlement of lordship and propriety through the realm.—Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 103.

Nor would the return of popery be a proper means, were there any thing wanting of this kind to restore or to resettle men in their just rights, but rather to unsettle every thing, and to throw us back again into the wildest confusions.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 461.

We may venture, however, to apply this conducting of the queen to the palace of her lord, to some remarkable assistance which the Israelites will receive from the Christian nations of the Gentile race, in their resettlement in the holy land.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

The duke of Yorke passed it ouer lyghtly ynough, for he was euer lyghtly resydent about the kynge and with the duke of Lancastre.—Id. Ib. c. 210.

Last of al came the queere of Pauls, with their residents, the bishop of London and the abbots following after in their pontificalibus.—Fox. Actes, p. 976. Henry VIII.

They [the Neruians] were sauage people and of great vaieantness: often rebuking and finding much fault with the residew of the Belgies, for yeelding theymselues to the people of Rome, and casting away theyr auncient prowessse.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 53.

I mean she should be courteous, facile, sweet,
Hating that solemne vice of greatnesse, pride;
I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that softer bosome to reside.—B. Jonson, Epig. 75.

One from the forrest now approach'd their sight,
Who them did swiftly on the spurr pursue;
One there still resident, as day and night,
And known as th' eldest oke which in it grew.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 2.

Separation: it is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary residence or settlement of liquors.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 302.

This translavation ought so long to be continued out of one vessell into another, untill such time as it have done casting any residence downward; for the sediment that resteth in the bottome is the best.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 18.

Who now remains as blessed in her seat,
As you are with her residency bless'd.
Daniel. To the Lady Lucy.

When they believe it to be no idolatry, then their so believing it is sufficient security from that crime which hath so great a tincture and residency in the will, that from thence onely it hath its being criminal.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Propheying, § 20.

Christ was the conductor of the Israelites into the land of Canaan and their residential guardian.—More.

They having in this sort made some small resistance, in the end turned their backs and fled, and left a great number slain in the field, the residue after the last overthrow forsook their captains, and fled stragling here and there.
North. Plutarch, p. 525.

Far from your Capital my ship resides
At Reithrus, and secure at anchor rides;
Where waving groves on airy Neion grow,
Supremely tall, and shade the deeps below.
Thence to revisit your imperial dome,
An old hereditary guest I come.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms.—Addison.

Suppose, though I disown it, said the Hind,
The certain mansion were not yet assign'd:
The doubtful residence no proof can bring Against the plain existence of the thing.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Afterwards, in baptism, the same Spirit fixes, as it were, his dwelling, or residential abode, renewing the heart in greater measure.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 349.

About that time he [John Williams] had several benefices confer'd upon him, of which the rectory of Waldgrave in Northamptonshire was one. Dinam and Grafton two more, a *residential*ship in the church of Lincoln, one or more prebendships therein, and the office of chaunter.

Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. i.

The prince elector did afterwards kindly invite him [Theodore Haak] to be his secretary, but he, loving solitude, declined that employment, as he did the residentship at London for the city of Hamburg.—Id. Ath. Oxon. vol. i.

We being persons of considerable estates in the kingdom, and residers therein.—Swift. Advertisement against Wood.

The ideas of tutelary god and king implied a local residence.—Warburton. Julian, b. i. c. 1.

Assuming, therefore, that every departed soul has its place of residence it would be reasonable to suppose, if revelation were silent on the subject, that a common mansion is provided for them all, their nature being similar.

Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

When all the debts and particular legacies are discharged, the surplus or residuum must be paid to the residuary legatee, if any be appointed by the will.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 32.

RESIGN, v. } Fr. Résigner; It. Rassegnare; Sp. Resignar; Lat. Resignare, (re, and signare,) to undo the sign, or signet, or seal; to break the seal; and, consequentially, to annul or cancel, (sc. the validity of a sealed instrument,) to surrender or yield up, (sc. any thing given or granted under sign or seal;) and hence, generally,—

To surrender or yield up; to renounce or abandon, (to yield or submit.) See the quotation from Cogan.

For mine estate, royall here I resigne
Into her honde. Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

They dreden shame, and vices they resigne.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

The cardinall, to bring ye worlde into a foole's paradise, was compelled euē with his owne good will to resigne his chanceryship, and that to who he listed him selfe.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 374.

All though he [Rich. II.] had and myght sufficiently have declared his renouncement by the redyng of an other meane persone, yet he, for the more suretie of the mater, and for the sayde resygnacyon should haue his full force and strengthe, he therefore redde the scrowle of resygnacyon hymselfe, in maner and fourme as foloweth.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1399.

When all the company prayed him to take charge of the whole army, and that Scipio himself and Varus both did first give him place, and willingly resigned unto him the honour to command the whole camp: he answered them, he would not offend the law.—North. Plutarch, p. 656.

Cha. I grant it.

For the honor of our sex, nor have you, madam,
By any weakness, forfeited command;
He that succeeds, in justice, was before you,
And you have gain'd more, in a royal brother,
Than you could lose by your resign of Epire.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Coronation, Act iv. sc. 1.

Then to the Tow'r (where he remained) went
The duke, with all the peers in company,
To take his offer with his free consent,
And this his resignation testify.—Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

And after, to your issue that suruiues,
A good resignement of the goods ye leaue;
With all the honor that your selues receiue
Amongst your people.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

But so much has your danger, and that spell,
The powerful name of friend, prevail'd above him
To whom I ever owe obedience,
That here I am, by his command to cure ye,
Nay more for ever, by his full resignment,
And willingly I ratifie it.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Monsieur Thomas, Act iii. sc. 1.

The field of combat fits the young and bold,
The solemn council best becomes the old:
To you the glorious conflict I resign,
Let sage advice, the palm of age, be mine.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Deaneries and prebends may become void, like a bishoprick, by death, by deprivation, or by resignation to either the king or the bishop.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

Resignation superadds to patience a submissive disposition, respecting the intelligent cause of our uneasiness. It acknowledges both the power and the right of a superior to afflict.—Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. s. 3.

RESILE, v. } Fr. Résilier; Lat. Re-silire, RESILIENCY. } (re, and salire, to leap,) to leap RESILIENCY. } back. See ASSAIL.

To leap or start back; to spring back; to retreat quickly.

And if you strike a ball side-long, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resiliency in echos (that is, whether a man shall hear better, if he stand aside the body repassing, than if he stand where he speaketh, or any where in a right line between) may be tried.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 245.

Those who have not seen the strange effects of modes, will never imagine the reception I met with at Paris from men and women of all ranks and stations. The more I resiled from their excessive civilities, the more I was loaded with them.—Hume. Life, by himself.

And these rules, corrupted by fraud, or debased by credulity, have, by the common resiliency of the mind from one extreme to another, incited others to an open contempt of all subsidiary ordinances, all prudential caution, and the whole discipline of regulated piety.—Rambler, No. 110.

RE/SIN. } Fr. Résin, résineux. See ROSIN.
RE/SINOUS. }

At the bottom of the retort we had good store of a ponderous and brittle substance, that did not look at all like a metal, but rather like something of a gummy or resinous nature, being also fusible and inflammable almost like sealing-wax.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 69.

RESIPISCENCE. Fr. Résipiscence; Lat. Resipiscencia, from resipiscere, (resipere, re, and sapere,) to grow or become sensitive again; to regain or recover the senses. Cotgrave calls it "a second thinking wiser than the first;" it is, consequentially,—penitence or repentance.

So powerful is the impression of a divinity in humane nature, that the most erring beliefs are forc'd to discern the utility, and the most perverted lives the necessity of such a sovereign: who abounds with such benigntie ev'n towards these irritations, that he provides motives respectively proper for the rectifying each of these errors; offering the ingenious reason and the sensual fear towards their disabuse and resipiscence.—Mountague. Dev. Ess. pt. ii. Treat. 3. s. 2.

RESIST, v. } Fr. Résister; It. Resistere; RESISTANT, n. } Sp. Resistir; Lat. Resistere, RESISTANCE. } (re, and sistere,) Gr. ἰσθαι, to stand against. See CON-SIST, DESIST, &c.
RESISTER. } To stand or stay against;
RESISTIBLE. } to withstand; to set, put, or RESISTIBILITY. } place against, to oppose; to RESISTINGLY. } strive or struggle against, to RESISTIVE. } contend against.
RESISTLESS. }

Resistance, from resists,—is usually written, improperly, resistance.

These metales ben of so gret violence,
Our walles may not make hem resistance.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16, 376.

For whom fortune woll assayle,
There mai be no suche resistance.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.
What can he doo but yeld, that must resist alone?

Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 4.

After that worde was broughte vnto the emperours, that Maximus hadde with harde bataylles subdued Gallia and Germania, Gracianus with a great hoost came downe to resyste hym.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 72.

Neuertheless there is none so perfect in this life that findeth not let and resistance by the reason of originall sinne, or birth poyson that remayneth in him.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 165.

After which towne so yeldyn syr Edmund of Woodstoke, the kynges brother, than beyng at Burdeaux as ye kynges deputye, made such resystens agayn the sayde Charlys de Valoys, that a trewece was takyn for that yere.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1325.

Such as rebelled against them they tooke as rebels and resisters against God his ordinance and christian pietie.

Fox. Actes, p. 158.

But they then, though no more furious, yet more courageous when they saw no resister, went about with pickaxe.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Doth not he, that lyueth after such sorte, resistingly denie Christ, his mouth sayeth not agaynst him, but hys life doth.

Udal. 1 John, c. 2.

So long he muzed, and so long he lay,
That at the last his wearie sprite oppress
With fleshly weaknesse, which no creature may Long time resist, gave place to kindly rest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

With noyse whereof the theefe awaking light
Unto the entrance ran; where the bold knight
Encountering him with small resistance slew.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 12.

Yea, the Statute of 13 Ed. 1. cap. 38. recites; that such resistance of processe out of any of the king's courts (much more then out of the highest court of parliament) redounds much to the dishonour of the king and his crowne; and that such resisters shall be imprisoned and fined, because they are disturbers of the king's peace and of his realme.

Prynne. Sovereign Power, pt. iii. p. 12.

Either therefore our opposites must grant all bishops, priests, ministers, yea, all other magistrates whatsoever, as irresistible, unexcusable, undeprivable, uncondemnable, for any crimes whatsoever, as they say kings are, which they dare not do; or else make kings as resistible, censurable, deprivable, and lyable to all kindes of punishments, (by their whole kingdom's consent in parliament) as far forth as they, notwithstanding all the former objections, which quite subverts their cause.—Id. Ib. p. 211.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed that of Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer it unto the schoolman.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 1.

—Against when

I'll have an excellent new fucus made,
Resistive 'gainst the sun, the rain, or wind,
Which you shall lay on with a breath, or oil,
As you best like. B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act i. sc. 1.

When to the cave they came, they found it fast;
But Calidore, with huge resistesse might,
The dores assayed, and the locks upbrast.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

All the bodies in the world, pressing a drop of water on all sides, will never be able to overcome the resistance it will make, as soft as it is, to their approaching one another, till it be removed out of their way: whereby our idea of solidity is distinguished both from pure space, which is capable neither of resistance nor motion, and the ordinary idea of hardness.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 4. s. 3.

According to the decrees of power in the agent and resistant, is an action performed or hindred.

Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 6.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility together in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same.—Locke.

Abdelm. Fly, fly, before the allurements of her face,
E'er she return with some resistless grace,
And with new magick covers all the place.

Dryden. The Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

'Tis resistlessly plain that the divine writers do not always confine themselves to plain and common grammar, but often express their vigorous sentiments in the language of the figurative construction.

Blackwall. Sacred Classics, vol. i. p. 61.

Because resistance is justifiable to the person of the prince when the being of the state is endangered, and the public voice proclaims such resistance necessary, they have therefore allowed to every individual the right of determining this expedience, and of employing private force to resist even private oppression.—Blackstone. Comment. b. i. c. 7.

But then he is almost inconceivably awful; absolute in authority, resistless in power: we and all nature are entirely in his hands, and depend on the breath of his mouth.

Secker. Works, vol. ii. Ser. 1

RESOLVE, v. } Fr. Résoudre; It. Risolvere;

Resolute, n. (Burnet)—redelivery, repayment; and, as in Shakespeare, resolute, determined persons.

Ne no man ne wondreth, whan the weight of the snowe, harded by the cold, is resolved by the brennyng heate of Phebus the Soonne, for here seene menne readily the causes.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Tigris and Eufates, resoluen and springen of o welle in the craggis of the roche of the cuntry of Achemenes.

Id. Ib. b. v.

I [Luther] haue giuen resolute answer to the first, in the which I persist and shall perseuer for euermore.

Fox. Actes, &c. Hen. VIII. p. 776.

And ye shall enquire of the yearly resolutes, deductions, and paiements going forth of the same.

Burnet. Records, vol. ii. b. i. No. 27.

And so at last (after longe and great deliberation had in the matter) because ther is no better counsaillour, then leasure and tyme, he wold resolutelie with his learned and consummate iudgemēt cōfirme it.

Bp. Gardner. True Obedience, Pref. fol. iv.

It liketh me, quod she, to haue heard your question,
But lenger time doth aske a resolucion.

Wyatt. Complainte vpon Loue.

Of the whiche wordes the duke made light; and for resolucion of answer at that tyme the duke sayde, Cosyn, we knowe welle this that ye haue sayde is trewe.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 123.

Ham. Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolue it selfe into a dew.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

And how his limbs, resolv'd through idle leisour,
Unto sweete sleepe he may securely lend,
In some coole shadow from the scorching heat,
The whiles his flock their chawed cuds do eate.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

Kitt. No, Thomas, I dare take thy word,
But, if thou wilt swear, do as thou think'st good;
I am resolv'd without it.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. 2.

Something yet of doubt remains
Which only thy solution can resolve.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

For Henry, sonne unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolue,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in love.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 5.

I doubt not but the opinative resolver thinks all these easie knowables, and the theories here accounted mysteries are to him revelations.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmat. Pref.

Little doe these peremptory resolvers know, either the insinuate power of evill, or the treachery of their own heart in receiving it, or the importunitie of deceivers in obtruding it.—Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis? s. 14.

Agis meeting with Aratus by the city of Corinth, even as he was consulting whether he should fight his enemy or not, shewed himself in his counsell then no rash but a resolute and valiant man.—North. Plutarch, p. 666.

— Now, sir, young Fortinbras,
Of vnimproued mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, heere and there,
Shark'd up a list of landlesse resolutes.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

This most couragious queen,
The puissant Danish powers victoriously pursu'd,
And resolutely here through their thick squadrons hew'd
Her way into the north.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

Bian. Sister, I should too much bewray my weakness,
To give a resolution on a passion
I never felt nor fear'd.—Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act i. sc. 1.

The ashes of the void shels only alone without the snails mixed with wax are of a resolutive and discentient facultie.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxx. c. 8.

The continuation of these two motions of the earth, the annual and diurnal, upon axes different or not parallel, is resolvable into nothing but a final and mental cause, or the το βελτιστον, because it was best it should be so.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 684.

Positive precepts, though we are used to consider them merely as prescribed, and to resolve them commonly into the mere will and pleasure of the legislator, yet are always founded upon reasons, known, perhaps, in part to us, but perfectly known to God; and so they are ultimately resolvable into infinite wisdom and goodness.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 441.

Wherefore I will now proceed to my third general consideration; which is, that it does not appear that three is precisely and universally the number of the distinct substances or elements, whereunto mixt bodies are resolvable by the fire.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 511.

Many of them may be wrought on, as we have tried, both by simple water and even by moist air, which argues the resolubleness of their constitution.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 338.

Let us make no more vain excuses: let us no longer pretend I know not what difficulties; but let us chearfully and resolvedly apply ourselves to the working out our salvation.
Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

But let not our undauntedness appear the effect of sullen-ness, or fierceness, or of meer resolvedness; but let it be so calm and charitable that we may not be suspected to be the martyrs, rather of our glory, or our courage, than of our religion.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 303.

As to the habit of the body, young people, such as live effeminately, require to be treated with milder resolvents than those who live a labouring life.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 19.

Opium, (with which unskilful men seldom tamper without danger,) if duly corrected and prepared, proves sometimes a great resolver, and commonly a great sudorifick.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 188.

You all the way resolutely dispute with me the point of the Son's necessary existence, as much as the other point of the Father's supremacy; you are resolute in denying the Son to be one God with the Father.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 19.

There is (replies the Roman) so great a difference betwixt the case of a resolved soldier, that thinks himself in point of reputation engaged not to retreat, and that of a young lady from whom no resoluteness, much less obstinacy, can be expected.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 300.

Then teach my soul, to doubt and error prone,
Teach me a resolution like thy own.
Let partial favour, hopes, or interest guide,
By various motives, all the world beside,
To Pompey's, or ambitious Caesar's side;
Thou, Cato, art my leader.—Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. i.
VOL. II.

The next scene I must open relates to the church, and the heats raised in it by the public resolutions, and the pro-testation made against them.—Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

The resolutioners sent up one Sharp, who had been long in England, and was an active and eager man.—Id. Ib.

RE/SONANT. See RESOUND.

RESORB, v. } Lat. Resorbere, to suck RESORBENT, adj. } back again. See ABSORB.
To suck or sup up again; to swallow or imbibe
again.

— And when past
Their various trials in their various spheres,
If they continue rational, as made,
Resorbs them all into himself again.
Young. The Complaint, Night 4.

For less than this is shocking in a race
Most wretched, but from streams of mutual love;
And uncreated, but for love divine,
And, but for love divine, this moment lost,
By fate resorb'd, and sunk in endless night.
Id. Ib. Night 3.

Again resorbent ocean's wave Receives the waters, which it gave
From thousand rills with copious currents fraught.
Wodhull.

RESORTER. } hold by lot; sors, lot, the RESORTING, n. } allotment, sc. of land, by partition among the victors; consequentially, settlement, abode: and, resort, to return to our allotted land, to return home; and, generally,—

To return frequently; to recur, or have, or make recurrence or recurrence frequently to, to frequent; to repair to, to revisit; to relapse; to result, to spring or issue.

Al I refuse but that I might resorte
Unto my loue the well of goodliheed.
Chaucer. Lamentation of Mary Magdalene

In trouth alway to do you my servise,
As to my lady right, and cheefe resort,
With all my witte and all my diligence.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

But sygnification was soone made hereof by fyres, (as Cæsar had commaunded before,) and spedye resort was made thither frome the bulwarkes.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 64.

Afterward by the confluence of the neighbours of the places there aboutes, which for couetousnesse of gain brought many things to sell to the straigers, and builded them houses to dwell among them; at lengthe there was such a resort of men thither, that it was euen as good as a city.
Id. Justine, fol. 89.

Juuenal the poet, in his booke called Satyrs, sayth, yt no wiues, that list to content and please sad and honest men, wilbe found or seen at comon plaies, dansings, or other great resort of people.

Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 12.
As for in Myddlesex, I remember none, or in the eytye selfe, eyther of resiauntes therin, or of resorters thereto, Englyshe men or straungers.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 900.

Who when he hath with spoiles and cruelty
Ransackt the world, and in the wofull hartes
Of many wretches set his triumphes hye,
Thether resortes, and laying his sad dartes
Asyde, with faire Adonis playes his wanton partes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

A little lowly hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forest's side,
Far from resort of people, that did pas
In traveill to and froe.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 2.

At which their markets were dispos'd, counsels and

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

But certainly some there are that know the resorts and falls of businesse, that cannot sinke into the maine of it:
like a house that hath convenient staires and entries but never a faire roome.—Bacon. Ess. Of Cunning.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs.
Shakespeare. Prince of Tyre, Act iv. sc. 6.

We'll in our faces our colours display,
And hallow our yearly resorting.
Brome. The Painter's Entertainment.

When next the sun his rising light displays,
And gilds the world below with purple rays;
The Queen, Æneas, and the Tyrian Court
Shall to the shady woods, for sylvan game, resort.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathless destiny;
Whose dark resorts since prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide for what shall be.
Id. Annus Mirabilis.

For the design that was laid for that and all other circumstances of the story, we must have resort to the account that is given of it, Numb. xvi.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Holland lies at a great distance from the seas to which cruell to hym, he wente him to the houses of the hell; and he tempered his blandishing songs by resounding of stringes.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

The secrete groues which oft we made resounde,
Of pleasaunt playnt, and of our ladies' praise,
Recording oft what grace ech one had founde,
What hope of speede, what drede of long delayes.
Surrey. Prisoner in Windsor.

Who when those pittifull outcries he heard
Through all the seas so ruefully resound,
His charett swifte in hast he thether steard.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

Moreover, the sound made by reverberation of the aire, which men call eccho, is hurtfull unto them; for they feare mightily that resounding noise, comming with a double stroke.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 19.

His huge trunk sounded, and his armes did eccho the resound.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

The only noise which rolled through the sky
Were holy echoes that to her did bear
The sweet resounds of those rich anthems.
Beaumont. Psyche, p. 300.

The resounding of the sea upon the shore, and the murmur of winds in the woods without apparent wind, show wind to follow.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 817.

— His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions low and high Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Now near the shelves of Circe's shores they run, (Circe the rich, the daughter of the Sun,)
A dangerous coast; the goddess wastes her days
In joyous songs, the rocks resound her lays.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vii.

An antient musician, that was present at what was said, informed me that there were some famous lutes, one or two of which he named to me, that attained not their full seasoning and best resonance, till they were about fourscore years old.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 450.

Through the throng of these astonished spectators the procession passed by the public streets of Jerusalem to the Temple, where immediately the sacred porticoes resound with the continued hosannas of the multitudes.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 32.

RE-SOURCE. } Fr. Resource, a new source RESOUR/CELESS. } or spring; resourdre, (re, and sourdre,) to spring or rise up again; to abound; and, thus, resource,—

The spring, well, or fountain-head, of abundance in need, of aid or succour in distress.

For whatsoever from our hand she [the earth] takes,
Greater or less, a vast return she makes,
Nor am I only pleas'd with that resource,
But with her ways, her method, and her force.
Denham. Of Old Age, pt. iii.

Yet those how feeble, and, indeed, how vain,
You see too well; nor need my words explain.
Vanquish'd without resource; laid flat by fate,
Factions within, a foe without the gate.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

Fear wing'd my flight; and having once transgress'd,
To flee I judg'd my last resource and best.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. 17.

A poor, unfruitful, and resourceless subjection.—Burke.

RE-SOW, v. To sow again.

And [many times] they are forced to resow summer-corne, where they sowed winter-corne.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 169.

RE-SPEAK, v. To speak again, in return or answer; to answer.

No second health that Denmarke drinks to day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rouse, the heauens shall bruit againe, Respeaking earthly thunder.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

RESPE'CT, v. Fr. Respect; It. Rispettare, rispetto; Sp. Respetar, respeto; Lat. Respicere, (re, and specere,) to look back, to look again.
RESPE'CT, n. To look back again, to regard, to keep in view, to hold in view, or in consideration, (sc. as estimable or honourable; deserving consideration or reflection;) to feel, have, offer, or pay regard or honour to; to esteem, to honour; to regard considerably.

Respective,—having respect, regard, reference, or relation, especially, individually; having especial or particular regard or reference; regardful, considerate; reflective.

Respectably, respectability, are words common in speech.

No respect having what was best to done,
Till right anone beholding here and there,
I spied a friend of mine.—Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

To whose diligence imminent dangers and difficult attempts seemed nothing, in respect of his willing mind, for the commoditie of his prince and country.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 33.

The said Christ, Goe thou and do likewise, that is, without difference or respectio of persons.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 78.

In dooing of all which things the king hath not bene thus respectiue, as the pope now sheweth himselfe towards him, but like a perfect friend hath bene alwaies contented franklie, liberally, and openly to expone all his study, labour, traualle, treasure, puissaunce.

Fox. Actes, &c. Hen. VIII. p. 980.

But what haue these our respectiuius to doe with the Apostle Paule, seeing they are the whole vniuersall church, by whose authoritie Paule either standeth or falleth, beeing but a member onelie and a part of the church.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1173.

For they feared least they should note him for a heretike, whom they were not able perhaps to conuince either to be erroneous or offensive, and therefore they haue found out this aduerbe respectiue, and after numbring of the articles, then come they and say that some be respectiue hereticall, some erroneous, and some offensive.—Id. Ib. p. 1170.

But by that sight Kalandar soon judged that his guest was of no mean calling; and therefore the more respectfully entertained him.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Which meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

All my delight on deedes of armes is sett,
To hunt our perilles and adventures hard,
By sea, by land, whereso they may be mett,
Onely for honour and for high regard,
Without respect of riches or reward.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Yet the huge stroke, which he before intended,
Kept on his course, as he did it direct,
And with such monstrous poise adowne descended,
That seemed nought could him from death protect:
But he it well did ward with wise respect.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 12.

Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons.—Acts, x. 34.

What should it be that he respects in her,
But I can make respectiue in my selfe?

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 4.

—Dost thou sleepe? Eacides, am I Forgotten of thee? Being alive, I found thy memorie Ever respectfull: but now dead, thy dying love abates.
Interre me quickly, enter me in Plutoes iron gates.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

We relieve idle vagrants and counterfeit beggars, but have no care at all of these really poor men, who are, methinks, to be respectfully treated in regard of their quality.

Cowley. Of Avarice.

For standing now alone, he sees his might
Out of the compass of respectiue awe;
And now begins to violate all right,
While no restraining fear at hand he saw.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Rom. He gon in triumph, and Mercutio slaine?
Away to heauen respectiue lenitie,
And fire and fury be my conduct now.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 2.

2 Cup. If it were the basest filth or mud that runs in the channel, I am bound to pledge it respectfully, sir.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 4.

Bob. Shall I? you hear fellow Stephano, learn to know me more respectfully; how dost thou think I shall become the steward's chair, ha?

Beaumont & Fletcher. Lover's Cure, Act i. sc. 2.

Tydidies and my selfe (as halfe appall'd
With your remorsefull plaints) would, passing faine
Haue broke our silence; rather then againe
Endure, respectlesse, their so mouing cries.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

Sis. Why then I see there is no hope of him;
Some husbands are respectless of their wives,
During the time that they are issueless;
But none with infants blest can nourish hate,
But love the mother for the children's sake.

Wilkins. Miseries of Inforced Marriage, Act iii.

The sixth place declares this prohibition to be as respectless of human nature, as it is of religion, and therefore is not of God.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 10.

This said, he ceas'd: the king of men replies:
Thy years are awful, and thy words are wise.
But that imperious, that unconquer'd soul,
No laws can limit, no respect control.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

—Check'd, at last,
By love's respectful modesty, he deem'd
The theft profane, if aught profane to love
Can e'er be deem'd.

Thomson. Summer.

I charge you all no more foment
This feud, but keep the peace between Your brethren and your countrymen,
And to those places straight repair,
Where your respective dwellings are.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

There are three schemes which I may call Catholic, Sabelian, and Arian, one of the three must, in the main, be true. The way to know which is to weigh and consider the difficulties attending each respectively, and to balance them one against another.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 162.

I thought it pardonable to say nothing by a respectful silence than by idle words.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 44.

She saw the deities approach her dome,
And from her hand dismiss'd the golden comb;
Then rose respectfully, all with beauty grac'd,
And on rich thrones the great immortals plac'd.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. iii.

Goodness alone is not sufficient to create respect. For should it be seated in a mind which indicates extreme imbecility, it cannot be deemed respectable.

Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. § 3.

We know not their number, their situation, nor the member to which they respectfully belong.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 4.

RESPE'RSE, v. Lat. Respersus, past part. of respergere, (re, and spargere,) to sprinkle.
To sprinkle, to scatter, to strew.

Hence I hope that they may the rather be invited to love and consider the rare documents of Christianity, which certainly is the great treasure-house of those excellent moral and perfective discourses, which with much pains and greater pleasure we finde respersed and thinly scattered in all the Greek and Roman poets, historians, and philosophers.

Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, Pref. s. 42.

Take David's Psalter, or the other hymns of holy scripture, or any of the prayers which are respersed over the Bible.—Id. Discourse on Extempore Prayer, s. 31.

And they speak thus particularly in the matter of the Holy Sacrament as appears in the instances above reckoned and in others respersed over this treatise.

Id. Of the Real Presence, § 10.

RESPI'RE, v. Fr. Respirer; It. Respirare; RESPI'RATION, n. Sp. Respirar; Lat. Respirare, RESPI'RABLE. (re, and spirare, to breathe, RESPI'RATORY. A.S. Spir-ian.)

To breathe, to take breath again; to cease from laborious exertion, (causing excessive breathing;) to pause, to rest.

Then shall the Britons, late dismay'd and weake,
From their long vassalage gin to respire,
And on their Paynim foes avenge their wranckled ire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

—Then when againe her respirations found Free passe, (her minde and spirit met) these thoughts her words did sound.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

Yet still he heaves, and, struggling with despair,
Shakes all aside, and gains a gulp of air:
A short relief, which but prolongs his pain;
He faints by fits; and then respire again.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

The idea of respiration, like that of spontaneous motion, is one of those that compose our complex idea of every animal.—Bolingbroke, Ess. 2. Human Reason.

Alone the wind from Libya's sands respire,
And burns each warrior's breast with secret fires.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. xiii.

In the construction of the respiratory organs, a bird and a snake are not the same.—Hunter.

The toiling steeds expand the nostril wide,
While ev'ry breath, by respiration strong Forc'd downward, is consolidated soon
Upon their jutting chests. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

RE/SPITE, n. Fr. Respiter, respit; It. Rispetto; Nicot,—from respirare; Menage and Skinner,—from respectus; q.d. tempus respiciendi, a pause, a cessation; delay.

To pause, cease, delay; to prolong or to prologue; to stay, to withhold.

—& said, the Scottes wilde
Thre dayes haf respite, & than the castelle gelde.

R. Brunne, p. 275.

But wold ye vouchen sauf upon seurtee
Two yere or three for to respiten me,
Than were I wel.—Chaucer. Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,951.

And by this cause he was respited
So that the death him was acquitted.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And when it is so ferforth come,
That Saul hath hym discomfite,
The god bad make no respite,
That he ne shulde hym slea anone.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

In doying herof he spent ten dayes, not respityng hys soldiers fro their labour so muche as the nyght tyme.

Goldinge. Caesar. Commentaries, fol. 115.

By and by after, so that there was scarce so much respit as to order and dispose the things they had determined, the ennemyes, at a watch worde geuen, came running down on al sides.—Id. Ib. fol. 67.

Those [lustes] same against the bulwarke of the sight
Did lay strong siege and battailous assault,
Ne once did yield it respitt day or night.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

They died every man of them a wicked death, saving this Theodorus, whom fortune respited a little while longer, and yet in that time he lived a poor and miserable life, never tarrying long in any one place.—North. Plutarch, p. 829.

If we may venture to declare more particularly in what sense God might be said to have hardened their hearts, it was, very probably, by forbearing to strike terror into them; by giving them respite, and not pursuing them constantly, and without remission.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 121.

The entry therefore on the roll or record is, "that the jury is respited, through defect of the jurors, till the first day of the next term, then to appear at Westminster."

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 23.

RESPLE'NDENT. Fr. Resplendir, re-splendissant; It. Risplendere; Sp. Resplandecer; Lat. Resplendere, (re, and splendere,) to shine, to return or remit, a splendour or brightness.

Brightly shining, brilliant, refulgent.

O courfin figure resplendent with glory.
Chaucer. The Craft of Louers.

The heuyn visible is most pleasauntly garnished with planettes and sterres, resplendishynge in the mooste pure firmament of asure colour.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. p. 162.

And thorowe ye vertue of thy full myght,
Causest ye world to be resplendishant.

Fabyan. Chronicle, c. 49.

Where all within full rich arayd he found,
With royall arras and resplendent gold,
And did with store of every thing abound,
That greatest princes' presence might behold.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

There hang downe certaine buttons (as it were) like berries round in a circle, which, with the repercussion and reverberation of the sun beames, doe shine againe like resplendent gold.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 25.

Son, thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, heir of all my might,
Neerly it now concernes us to be sure
Of our Omnipotence, and with what arms
We mean to hold what anciently we claim
Of Deitie or empire.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Their beauty and resplendency might be conspicuous to the beholders of them, whether by day or by night.

More. The Philosophical Cabbala, c. 1.

Automedon and Alcimus prepare
Th' immortal coursers and the radiant car,
(The silver traces sweeping at their side;)
Their fiery mouths resplendent bridles ty'd.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

It being nothing but the resplendency of his own almighty goodness, or his own outstretched rays shining back upon himself.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 1.

R. Brunne, p. 98.

Ye gave me ones a divine responsaile,
 That I should be the flowre of love in Troy,
 Now am I made an unworthy outwaile,
 And al in care translated is my joy.
Chaucer. The Testament of Creseide.

They so proceeded into the stables, there sitting all the masse time, the company standing in their copes, and singing a solemn respond in honour of the visitors.
Fox. Actes, &c. fol. 1778. Queene Mary.

In the entering out of the gate of the cite, as men go vnto Gothlehem, he did sing this hymne, Foelix namque. And that respond being ended, &c.—Id. Ib. fol. 585. Hen. V.

Ego nego, domine doctor, said the respondent. For though the virgine haue not proued, yet she imagineth, &c.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 170.

One was answered at Cambridge when he pressed the responsall, what saye ye to myne argumente—which was not in dede of his owne makinge.
Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of Transubstantiation, fol. 132.

Responsions unto the questions. To the first question I say.—Burnet. Records, b. iii. No. 21.

Shew unto the same how ye have received letters from the king's highness [Henry VIII.] and me, [Wolsey] responsives to such as ye wrote of the dates before rehearsed.
Id. Ib. b. ii. No. 23.

The responsorie which is called the Graduall (being woont to be sung at the steps going vp) with alleluia, Honorius saith that Ambrose made them, but pope Gregorie ordained them to be receiued.—Fox. Actes, &c. fol. 1275. Q. Mary.

And though to you our good Circassian friend
 In termes too bold and feruent oft doth preach,
 Yet hold I that for good in warlike feat,
 For his great deeds respond his speeches great.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. x.

We have known many of them taught to begin to sing, only, when a man would have them: and keepe there responds in course after others, in good concert and harmonie.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 29.

He was to be responsal both to God and the king.
Heylin. Life of Laud, p. 213.

The joyous birdes, shrouded in chearefull shade,
 Their notes unto the voice attuned sweet;
 Th' angelicall soft trembling voyces made
 To th' instruments divine responsance meet.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Peter alone [before] spred to the winde
 The glorious signe of our saluation great,
 With easie pace the quire come all behinde,
 And hymnes and psalmes in order true repeat,
 With sweet responsance in harmonious kinde
 Their humble song the yeelding aire doth beat.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xi.

His rent in fair responsance must arise
 To double trebles of his one yeare's price.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 1.

By whose words it is cleare that the ancient kings of France were inferiour in jurisdiction to their whole kingdoms and parliaments, yea censurable by them to deposition or death: yet that their kings of late are growne absolute monarchs above their kingdoms, nobles, parliaments, and so not responsable to nor punishable by them for the grossest misdemeanours.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, App.

This is much more modestly express'd than that responsory in the Roman breviary, speaking of the Apostles: They have deserved eternal rewards by despising the commands of princes.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Consec. b. iii. c. 3. Rule 6.

These are the pretty responsories, these are the dear antiphonies, that so bewitched of late our prelates and their chaplains with the goodly echo they made.
Milton. Areopagitica.

Let me remind you once again that you forgot the part you was to bear. Your business was not to oppose, but to respond; not to raise objections against our scheme, but to answer those which were brought against your own.
Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 5.

Instead of answering the difficulty proposed, which was the part of a respondent, you choose to slip it over, and endeavour to put me upon the defensive; which is by no means fair.—Id. Ib. p. 2.

After some short prayers and responsals, the mass-priest begs at the hands of God this great and blasphemous favor.
Brevint. Saul & Samuel, c. 14.

Tertullian takes notice that the responses in baptism were then somewhat larger than the model laid down by Christ, meaning, than the form of baptism: and he refers the enlargement of the responses to immemorial custom or tradition.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 161.

He has been pleased to ask, "Is the doctor willing to be responsible, at last, for the nature, quality, and tendency of all his notions?"—Id. Ib. p. 115.

Full swell the woods; their very music wakes,
 Mix'd in wild concert with the warbling brooks.
 Increas'd, the distant bleatings of the hills
 And hollow lows responsive from the vales.
Thomson. Spring.

The church was conducted in every step, at first by oracular responses, and afterwards by a long series and continued succession of prophets.
Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. i. c. 5.

The one is the judicious partition of the legislative authority between the king and the two houses of parliament; the other, the responsibility attaching upon the advisers and official servants of the crown.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 44.

Still would her touch the strain prolong,
 And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
 She call'd on Echo still through all the song;
 And where her sweetest theme she chose,
 A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
 And Hope enchanted smil'd, and wav'd her golden hair.
Collins. Odes. The Passions.

REST, v. Fr. Rester; It. Restare; Sp. Restar; Lat. Restare.—
REST, n. To stop or stay, to remain.
RESTIE. Also as the Fr.—
RESTIVE. "To remain, superabound, RESTIFNESS. be behind, superfluous, over-RESTIVENESS. plus, more than enough."

The rest,—that upon which any thing resteth; also, the remainder, the overplus; that which is not contained, or comprised, or included:—other of the same kind or class. See REST, infra.

To set up my rest; i. e. resting, abiding place; my stay, staid or fixed position.

Restive,—staying, stopping; resisting, refusing to go, to move; obstinate, stubborn.

But if thou art named a Jew, and restist in the lawe and hast glorie in God, and hast knowe his wille.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 2.

Neuertheless God hath written his will, to haue his benefites kept in memorie, to his glorie and our benefite, and namely this benefite of all benefites, wherein only the pith of our salvation resteth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 441.

But me besprent with teres, my tender son,
 And eke my swete Creusa, with the rest
 Of the household, my father gan beseeche.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

And would to God we were not like kicking and resty horses, more ready to go backward than forward.
Calvin. Fovre Godlye Sermons, Ser. 4.

Now resteth nought that needful is to tell.

 And, with pale eyes fast fix'd on the rest,
 Their counsell crav'd in daunger imminent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

Gio. Despair, or tortures of a thousand hells,
 All's one to me; I have set up my rest.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act v. sc. 3.

For their right hands they [the musqueteers] shall have rests of ashwood, or other tough wood, with iron pikes in the nether end, (to fix in the ground,) and half hoops of iron above, to rest the musquet on.—Soldier's Accidence, p. 4.

—Under whom, they will be much more shy,
 And (fearing my voice, wishing thine) grow restie, norgo on,
 To beare us off? Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune. Certaine deliveries of a man's selfe, which have no name. The Spanish name desembottura partly expresseth them: when there be not stonds, nor restiveness in a man's nature, but that the wheels of his minde keep way with the wheels of his fortune.—Bacon. Ess. Fortune.

By this the vessel half her course had run,
 And as much rested till the rising sun.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

Behind she stood, and by the golden hair
 Achilles seiz'd: to him alone confest;
 A sable cloud conceal'd her from the rest.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Such an idle, restive presence as this is utterly inconsistent with such active perfections.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 4.

He served his country when it was in need of his courage and conduct until he thought it was time to serve himself:

but dismounted from the saddle when he found the beast which bore him began to grow restif and ungovernable.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, Ded.

And now on Caucasus, with snow o'erspread,
 The rising morn her silver radiance shed,
 When proud Aeta, earlier than the rest,
 The fencing corslet buckled to his breast.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. Argonautics, b. iv.

This also is vnmynded of wryters outhor for restfulness of tyme, or ellys for rudenesse of his dedes, that clerkes lyst nat to spende any tyme in wrytyng of such dedes.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 22.

So that more and more that coultre grewe to more restfulness and peas.—Id. Ib. an. 1296.

Lan. Well, well; but for my owne parte, as I haue set vp my rest to run awale, so I will not rest till I haue run some ground; my maister's a verie Jew; glue him a present? glue him a halter.
Shakespeare. The Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 2.

So forth she rode, without repose or rest,
 Searching all lands and each remotest part,
 Following the guydance of her blinded guest,
 Till that to the sea-coast at length she her addrest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Avrora, out of restfull bed, did from bright Tython rise,
 To bring each deathlesse essence light, and use, to mortall eyes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

—With faire attendants then,
 The sheets and bedding of the man of men,
 Within a cabin of the hollow keele,
 Spred, and made soft; that sleepe might sweetly seele
 His restfull eyes. Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. xiii.

Let not his love, let not his restlesse spright,
 Be unreveng'd, that calles to you above
 From wand'ring Stygian shores, where it doth endlesse move.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Meantime, retir'd to Tyber's flow'ry bounds,
 In the cool stream to bathe his glowing wounds,
 The wretched father (father now no more)
 In sullen sorrow rested on the shore.
Pitt. Virgil. Aeneid, b. x.

Guard the more strongly against a common falling, viz. the resting in a string of unmeaning words, which really carry in them no certain or no consistent ideas.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 279.

Nothing makes great men more suspicious of virtue than when we see philosophers become flatterers, and carrying on the restless designs of ambition under the pretence of teaching the art of contentment to others.
Stillington. vol. ii. Ser. 3.

When the mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember; thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together.—South.

The impotent triumphs of the Jews gave an élat to every movement which the restless though determined spirit of Julian was hourly pushing forward.

Warburton. Julian, b. i. c. 5.

Employment seldom so totally engages us as to fill up all the spaces of our time, but restlessness, whimsy, or habit come in to supply the vacancies.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 5.

These qualities, [our love of novelty, variety, and contrast,] on examination, will be found to refer to a certain activity and restlessness which has a pleasure and delight in being exercised and put in motion.—Reynolds, Dis. 8.

Fox. Actes, p. 62.

But that fierce foster, which late fled away,
Stoutly fourth stepping on the further shore,
Him boldly bad his passage there to stay,
Till he had made amends, and full restore,
For all the damage which he had him doen afore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

A great restorative it is with meat, and quickly setteth them on foot, who have lien long and been brought low by sicknesse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 23.

— These viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil,
But life preserves, destroys life's enemy
Hunger, with sweet restorative delight.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Poyson I see hath bin his timelesse end:
O churle, drinke all? and left no friendly drop,
To helpe me after, I will kisse thy lips,
Happlie some poyson yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

When they are foretelling either the sorrows and afflictions, or temporal restoration and deliverances of that people of the Jews, what sudden outleaps they will make to speak of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and the days of the gospel.—Leighton. Com. on the First Epist. of Peter, c. 1.

By which relation they might indeed illustrate the destruction of man by the old Serpent, and his restoration by the blood of Christ.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 1.

There slept th' impartial judge, and strict restorer
Of wrong or right, with pain or with reward.

Fletcher. Christ's Victory & Triumph.

Less pleasure take brave minds in battle won.
Than in restoring such as are undone.

Waller. Panegyrick on Cromwell.

I may add, that absurd practice of getting turf without any regularity; whereby great quantities of restorable land are made utterly desperate.—Swift. Works, vol. x. Let. 7.

A peculiar respect unto that part of Christian truth which concerns the mercifull intentions of God toward mankind, and the gracious performances of our Saviour in order to the accomplishing them; the promises of pardon to our sins, and restorat into God's favour upon the terms propounded in the Gospel, of sincere faith and repentance.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Now, in the pomp of this atchievement, will I present myself before Madam Laura, with a Behold, Madam, the happy restoration of Benito.

Dryden. Love in a Nunnery, Act iii. sc. 1.

The opinion said to have been started by Origen was, that wicked men, and even devils, after a certain revolution, should have their release and restoration.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 299.

Unless we take care frequently to revive our religion with this spiritual repast and restorative, and still to add new fewel to it as the flame decays, it will quickly pine away and expire.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4. s. 3.

Abraham was the grand restorer of true religion before sunk in Chaldæa, (and perhaps in several other places.)

Yet sette I cas, ye have bothe might and licence for to venge you; I say that ther ben ful many thinges that shuln restraine you of vengeance taking, and make you for to suffre.—Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus, p. 115.

There let your pity spred without restraint,
For lacke of pity, let not your seruauant faint.

Id. Commandements of Loue.

Of hir estate to knowe plaine,
She wolde hym nothyng els saine.
But of hir name, whiche she feigned,
And other thynges she restrained,
That o worde more she ne tolde.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Thus I alone, where all my fredome grewe,
In prison pine with bondage and restraint.

Surrey. Prisoner at Windsor.

Neither shoulde we haue any more wherewith to vexe them with confessions, cases reserued, restricted, or amplified for our gaine.—Fox. Actes, &c. p. 1173. Hen. VIII.

For they have not devised one of all those rules of restrictions, amplifications, very wittily invented in the small logicals which here our children in every place do learn.

Sir T. More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 7.

For sweetnesse doth allure the weaker sence
So strongly, that uneathes it can refraine
From that which feeble nature covets faine
But grieve and wrath, that be her enemies
And foes of life, she better can restraine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Wherein indeed we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable than the pen of the poet.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 19.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the Scripture, is elsewhere manifested by the phrases of the greatest latitude, used in this matter, 1. the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth nor can in any reason be interpreted to signifie a far smaller disproportionable part of the world.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 482.

So these two persons were euer restrayners and refrayners of the kinges wilfull scope and vnbridled libertie.

Grafton. Hen. VII. an. 19

By that which lately hapned, Una saw
That this her knight was feeble, and too faint:
And all his sinewes waxen weake and raw,
Through long emprisonment, and hard constraint,
Which he endured in his late restraint.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

About that time there was a general restraint throughout all Greece, restraining all manner of people to bear sail in any vessel or bottom, wherein there were above five persons, except only Jason, who was chosen captain of that great ship Argus, and had commission to sail every where, to chase and drive away rovers and pirats, and to scour the seas throughout.—North. Plutarch, p. 7.

Men have no power at all to detract from God's owne divine institutions, or to annex any conditions or restrictions to them.—Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iii. p. 117.

This subject may be considered two ways: 1. absolutely and in its full extent; 2. relatively or restrictively.

Hale. Cont. vol. ii. Doing as we would be done to.

Wherein indeed we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable than the pen of the poet.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 19.

'Tis true, Juturna mingled in the strife
By my command, to save her brother's life,
At least to try: but, by the Stygian lake,
(The most religious oath the gods can take)
With this restriction, not to bend the bow,
Or toss the spear, or trembling dart to throw.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

I dressed that wound with the same digestive, mixed with pulv. Galeni, upon dossils with thick pledgits, and some of the same restrictive over that, with such bandage as that part was capable of.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vi. c. 6.

Would you not think that physician mad who, having prescribed a purge, should immediately order you to take restraints upon it.—Dryden. An Essay of Dramatic Poesie.

The dyers use this water in reds, and in other colours wanting restringency, and in the dying of materials of the slacker textures.

Sir W. Petty. In Sprat's History of Royal Society, p. 293.

The common law of England, indeed, is said to abhor perpetuities, and they are accordingly more restricted there than in any other European monarchy; though even England is not altogether without them.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. ii. b. iii. c. 2.

If such a one can think that he may, with his conscience unhurt, conform for the sake of lucrative employments, he should never be permitted, on pretence of conscience, to plead the restrictive law, in order to evade those which are onerous.—Warburton. Alliance, b. iii.

RE-STRENGTHEN, v. To strengthen or fortify again.

Whereupon he [Lennox] dooth restrengthen the towne and steeple of Glasgow.—Holinshed. Scotland, an. 1543.

RE-STRIVE, v. To strive or struggle again.

But when amity was dead, confidence could not live, and who should quit first was the question; which, on neither part, either would perform, and restriving again afresh, with a kick and a wrench together, I freed my long captivated weapon.—Guardian, No. 133.

RE-SUBJECTION. Return to subjection or subservience.

Neither is it long since our kind apostate M. Carier gave us here in England (from bigger men than himselfe) an overture of the likelihood of this liberall dispensation from his holy father of Rome, upon the conditions of our re-subjection.—Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 3.

RE-SUBLIME, v. } Sublime, to raise or RESUBLIMATION. } heighten.

To sublime or raise again; to heighten again and again, (sc.) by fire.

Though it be most commonly requisite to resublime the sublimate that comes the first time up, that the salt and colcothar may be more exquisitely mixed, yet as far as we can guess by some trials it will not be expedient to resublime it above once or (at most) twice.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 217.

Which is though a known, yet a notable experiment among chymists, mercury sublimate may be deprived of its deadly corrosiveness, and prepared into a medicine inoffensive even to children, by bare re-sublimations with fresh mercury.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. p. 123.

RESULT, v. } Fr. Résulter; It. Risultare; RESULT, n. } Sp. Resultar; Lat. Result-

RESULTANT, adj. } are, (re, and saltum, past RESULTANCE. } part. of salire, to leap,) to leap or jump back; to spring back.

To spring or issue forth, (in return or in consequence,) to arise from, to ensue.

Out of that intermixture of Hebrew and Chaldean resulted a third language, call'd to this day the Syriac.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 60.

There is an exact geometrical justice that runs through the universe, and is interwoven in the texture of things. This is a result of that wise and almighty goodness that presides over all things.

Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 13.

The truth is, that if in these external marks or signatures there be any certainty, it must be taken from that which I call the total resultance.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 82.

Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made Of harmony, he would at next have said That harmony was she, and thence infer, That souls were but resultances from her And did from her into our bodies go.

Donne. Anatomy of the World. The First Anniversary.

Such suppose a Deity that, acting wisely, but necessarily, did contrive the general frame of things in the world; from whence by a series of causes doth unavoidably result whatsoever is now done in it.—Cudworth. Intellectual. Syst. p. 4.

For why are such voluminous authors read,
The learned labours of the famous dead,
But to prepare the mind for its defence,
By sage results and well-digested sense.

Pomfret. To a Friend.

By reason of the figure of the resultant corpuscles, and their fitness to convene, when dissolved in water, into curiously shaped bodies.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 530.

Not for its own sake merely, but for his
Much more who fashion'd it, he gives it praise;
Praise that from earth resulting, as it ought,
To earth's acknowledg'd sov'reign finds at once
It's only just proprietor in him.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

And when I weigh this seeming wisdom well,
And prove it in th' infallible result
So hollow and so false—I feel my heart
Dissolve in pity, and account the learn'd,
If this be learning, most of all deceiv'd.

Id. Ib. b. iii.

RESUME, v. } Fr. Résumer; It. Resumere; RESUMABLE. } Sp. Resumir; Lat. Re-sumere,
RESUMPTION. } (re, and sum-ere,) to take up again.

To take back; to take again, (sc.) the same state or position, the same course; to re-enter upon, to recommence.

Excepte he that resigned it, and by the consente of the people eftsones dyd resume it.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 2.

Not so, quoth he, for yet, when time doth serve,
My former shield I may resume againe:
To temporize is not from truth to swerve,
Ne for advantage terme to entertaîne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary.—Hale.

Hence the constitutions, or as they call it, the statutes of Philip the sixth, John the second, Charles the fifth, sixth, eighth, of resuming those things which were alienated by their ancestors, (of which resumptions there are many instances cited by Hugo Grotius.)

Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, p. 167. App.

The same was in the beginning with God. This is resuming what had been said before, after a kind of break, to connect it the more closely with the account of the creation.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 181.

Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent these flowers?

Waller. To a Lady in Retirement.

"A resumption of rewards, granted to members of the cortes," was once at least debated, if not enacted.

Bolingbroke. A Dissertation upon Parties.

Calmly he heard till Amurath's resumption
Rose to his thought, and set his soul on fire.

Johnson. Irene, Act ii. sc. 4.

RE-SUPINE, v. } It. Risupino; Lat. Resupinus, RESUPINATION. } (re, and supinus, from sup-are or sip-are, (facere,) found in the comp. dis-sipare, insipare, obsipare,)—

Thrown back, or on the back; lying on the back.

Our Vitruvius calleth this affection in the eye a resupination of the figure: for which word (being in truth his own, for ought I know) we are almost as much beholding to him as for the observation itself.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 62.

Outis, when I have eaten all his friends,
Shall be my last regale;—be that thy boon.
He spake, and downward sway'd, fell resupine,
With his huge neck aslant.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

RE-SURPRISE, v. To surprise; to take or catch suddenly, unexpectedly, again.

The castle of Cadmus was taken and the city of Thebes itself invested by Phœbidas the Lacedæmonian, insidiously, and in violation of league: the process of this action drew on a resurprise of the castle by the Thebans, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war even unto the walls of Sparta.—Bacon. Of a War with Spain.

RESURRECTION. Fr. Résurgir, résurrection; It. Risurgere, risurrezione; Sp. Resurreccion; Lat. Resurrectio, from resurgere, to rise again; (surgere, i. e. sursum regere, or erigere, to raise up.)

Rising or raising again. Called by Wiclif also the agen-rising.

Alle thei saine this same, that gare thei were & boun
To die in Jhesu name with gode deuocioun,
That for vs suffred schame, & died thorgh passoun.
We trowe it is our frame, his resurrection.

R. Brunne, p. 162.

And after hus resurrection Redemptor was hus name.

Piers Plouhman, p. 207.

Thanne in the resurrection whanne thei schulen rise agen whos wyf of these schal she be?—Wiclif. Mark, c. 12.

That made me rise ere it were day,
And this was now the first morow of Maie,
With dreadful herte, and glad deuocioun
For to been at the resurrection
Of this floure, whan that it should vnclose
Again the sunne.—Chaucer. The Legend of Good Women.

And we say, that this Christian resurrection of life is the vesting and setting of the souls of good men in their glorious, spiritual, heavenly, and immortal bodies.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 798.

Though he understand the things of religion ever so well, or believe ever so rightly: though he cry, Lord, Lord: be he ever so constant and devout in his prayers, or talk ever so much, or so well, or so earnestly for religion: unless he do good, unless his actions, and dealings, and behaviour come up to his knowledge, and his discourse correspond with his outward profession and belief, it will avail him nothing; he is not the man to whom Jesus Christ hath promised in the text [John v. 28, 29.] that he shall come to the resurrection of life.—Paley. Ser. 35.

RE-SURVEY, v. To survey; look over, view again.

If thou survive my well-contended day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shalt by fortune once more resurvey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover.

Shakespeare. Son. 32.

RESUSCITABLE. } suscitar; Lat. Resusci-

tare, (re, and suscitare, sursum citare, citere, to move up,) to move, to set, up again.

To set up again, to raise or rouse again, to renew, to revive.

I beseech thee, O Sonne of God, crucified for vs, and resuscitated Emanuell, gouerne, conserue, and defend thy church.—Fox. Actes, p. 789. Hen. VIII.

In hope that for the spirite of Christ dwelling in vs, our mortall bodyes shal be resuscitate, and as we haue in baptism be buried with Christ, so we be assured to be parte takers of his resurrection.

Bp. Gardner. Exposicion. On the Presence, p. 65.

Here we haue a cleare testimonie of the resuscitation of the dead to come where the vngodly shal be punysshed with payns perpetuall and the godly endued with ioye eternall.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, p. 8.

If then these playes, and poems haue hatched, haue propagated idolatrie, and paganisme heretofore; they may likewise resuscitate and foment it now, vnlesse God's grace withhold vs from it.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. p. 80.

Then did th' allotted hour of dawning right
First strike our ravish'd sight;
Which malice or which art no more could stay,
Than witches' charms can a retardment bring
To the resuscitation of the day,
Or resurrection of the Spring.

Cowley. Ode on his Majesty's Restoration.

The apothecary told the virtuoso that he had really prepared resuscitable plants a different way from that which others pretended to.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 605.

To wonder at a thousand insect forms,
These hatch'd and those resuscitated worms,
New life ordain'd and brighter scenes to share,
Once prone on earth, now buoyant upon air.

Cowper. Retirement.

It is difficult to resuscitate surprise, when familiarity has once laid the sentiment asleep.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

The word "quickened" is often applied to signify, not the resuscitation of life extinguished, but the preservation and continuance of life subsisting.

Bp. Horsley. vol. ii. Ser. 20.

RETAIL, v. } Skinner says from the Fr.
RETAIL, n. } Retailer, It. Ritagliare, to cut

RETAILER. } into pieces; and, thus, to sell by retail is to sell large quantities of goods in small parts or pieces. Tooke says, "To sell by tale is to sell by numeration, not by weight or measure, but by the number told; and that retail means—told over again." (See the quotation from Froissart.) To retail, as now used, is—

To sell in small numbers, portions, or quantities; i. e. either by numeration, weight, or measure; to deal out or dispose of in small portions. See DETAIL.

Ye be at a freer marte than they of Fraunce or Lombardy or other realmes whither as youre marchaundyse repayreth, for they be tailed and retailed agayne two or thre tymes in a yere, and ye passe by a reasonable ordynance sette and assessed vpon your marchaundyse.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 222.

Wheresoeuer they shal happen to sel or barter away any of their commodities to our subiects, they are to barter or sell by whole sale and not by retail, as by the yard or by the ounce in their houses or elsewhere, but by the packe, &c.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 506.

By the which slotnike [one-forty-eighth of a yard] the retailers sell their wares out of their shops, as goldsmiths, grocers, silkesellers, and such other, like as we doe vse to retail by the ounce.—Id. Ib. p. 256.

To whom I will retail my conquest wonne,
And she shall be sole victoresse, Cæsar's Cæsar.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

And so I hope, since first my hopes are gone,
To find in many what I lost in one;
And, like to merchants after some great loss,
Trade by retail, that cannot now in gross.
Carew. The Spark.

The retailer pays the States almost the one moiety as much as he paid for the commodity at first.
Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 7.

Mons. Barbeyrac understands the nature of evidence too well to apprehend that the retailing a misreport can amount to a proof.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 297.

The keepers of ale-houses pay for a licence to retail ale and spirituous liquors.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

These, and most other things which are sold by retail, the way in which the labouring poor buy all things, are generally fully as cheap, or cheaper, in great towns than in the remoter parts of the country.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 8.

The profits of the farmer, of the manufacturer, of the merchant, and retailer are all drawn from the price of the goods which the two first produce, and the two last buy and sell.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 5.

RETAIN, v. } Fr. Retenir; It. Ritenere; RETAINER. } Sp. Retener; Lat. Retinere,

Of nacions seuentie and two. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

My loue to scorn, my seruice to retaine,
Therein me thought you used crueltie.
Wyatt. The Louer abused renounceth Love.

And as it is impossible to be retayned vnto two diuers lords which are enemies one to the other, so it is impossible to serue God and Mammon.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 233.

The same Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, hath allured and drawn unto him by retainours many of your subjects.
Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. iii. No. 16.

For ye shal vnderstande that temporall lordes, in those dayes, kept other maner of houtholde and other maner of releyndour of houtholde seruantes and other nombre, ferre excedyng y^e the lordes at these dayes done.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1452.

And cause leaue to be giuen that they may passe, stay, and returne, and when they please depart, in such sort that,
for our loue and contentation, the said worshipfull John Keele, with the ship and mariners, haue no let, hinderance, or retention.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. v. p. 156.

Then, preacing to the pillour, I repeated
The read thereof for guerdon of my paine,
And, taking downe the shield, with me did it retaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

Though he had those enforcements of expense,
Both for offence, retentions, and defence.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

We will adde to all this, the retainment of the same name which the deceased had here, unless there be some special reason to change it; so that their persons will be as punctually distinguishd and circumscribed as any of ours in this life.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 11

I haue within this ile bene held for winde
A wondrous time; and can by no meanes find An end to my retention.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

What words (said she) flye your retentive pow'rs?
You know, you Locke your counsailes in your tow'rs
In my firme bosom; and that I am farre
From those loose frailties.—Id. Ib. b. xix.

Those secret checks which are raised within itself [the heart] readily conspire with all outward retentives.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Nabal & Abigail.

They cannot want outward retentives from sin that live either among friends or enemies.—Id. Ib. Nehemiah.

The great lord Mortimer erected again the round table at Kenelworth, after the ancient order of King Arthur's table, with the retinue of an hundred knights and an hundred ladies in his house, for the entertaining of such adventurers as came thither from all parts of Christendom.
Drayton. Mortimer to Isabel, Annot.

Still Hebron's honour'd, happy soil retains
Our royal hero's beauteous, dear remains.
Dryden. Abalom & Achitophel.

Strow'd bibulous above I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, the layers then
Of mingled moulds of more retentive earths,
The gutter'd rocks and mazy-running clefts.
Thomson. Autumn.

This whole train of suppositions or assertions, brought in as part of the retinue to wait upon the argument a priori, is little else but a train of error and false reasoning.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 467.

By denying that indulgence and undisturbed liberty of conscience to the members of the national church which the retainers to every petty conventicle enjoy.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

He is at all times, therefore, surrounded with a multitude of retainers and dependants, who, having no equivalent to give in return for their maintenance, but being fed entirely by his bounty, must obey him, for the same reason that soldiers must obey the prince who pays them.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 4.

Yet we must needs acknowledge, that upon what passes there depend our constitution, our strength, the acuteness of our senses, the quickness of our parts, the retentiveness of our memory, much of our passions, desires, and tempers.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 19.

Those "kings' daughters" were already distinguished ladies of the monarch's own court; these virgins are introduced to it by the queen; they follow her as part of her retinue, and are introduced as her companions.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

RE-TAKE, v. To take again; to seize again.

They in the end prevailed, that a day should be appointed when the house should be resolved into a committee of the whole house, and the remonstrance be then retaken into consideration.—Clarendon. Hist. of the Rebellion, vol. i. p. 311.

And it is now usual for the court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order (without any writ) immediate restitution of such goods as are brought into court to be made to the several prosecutors. Or else, secondly, without such writ of restitution, the party may peaceably retake his goods.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 27.

RETALIATE, v. } Lat. Talio, from talis, RETALIATION. } such as. Fr. Retalionne, requited, quitted, satisfied, or payed back with the like, (Cotgrave;) i. e. with such (talis) as had been received.

To return like for like, to quit or requite, to repay (in kind).

Not that I shall be mine own officer,
And hate with hate again retaliate;
But thou wilt lose the style of conqueror
If I, thy conquest, perish by thy hate.
Donne. The Prohibition.

He was so far from countenancing or abetting the wicked conspiracy against Jesus, that he gave a manifest evidence of his justice by retaliating upon the principal agent and contriver of it what he thought to have done to Jesus.

Sharp, vol. v. Disc. 3.

To tame our malicious and revengeful passions, it is not enough that we abstain from all unjust retaliations of injuries; but we must moreover restrain ourselves even from that lawful displeasure and just resentment which may safely be allowed to a meek and charitable disposition.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 2.

Nature makes us concerned originally with our own pleasures or pains: we feel not, and consequently regard not what happens to other people, until having received hurt from them, and found that our retaliating the like prevails upon them to desist from offending us, we thence learn the expedience of exerting ourselves upon such occasions.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 21.

Hence it will be evident that what some have so highly extolled for its equity, the lex talionis, or law of retaliation, can never be in all cases an adequate or permanent rule of punishment.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1.

Revenge in this case naturally dictates retaliation, and that we should impose the like duties and prohibitions upon the importation of some or all of their manufactures into ours. Nations accordingly seldom fail to retaliate in this manner.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 2.

RETARD, v. } Fr. Retarder; It. Ritardare; RETARDATION. } Sp. Retardar; Lat. Retardare, RETARDMENT. } (re, and tardus,) to make or cause to be slow; to forslow.

To forslow, to delay, to hinder, to impede, to detain, to postpone, to prolong.

Then, us behoven, yer elde sick accrewes,
Time to forelay, with spels retarding it.
Browne. Yonge Willie & Old Wernock.

Some years it [the Nile] hath also retarded, and came far later then usually it was expected.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 8.

Experiments in consort touching the putting back or retardation of germination.—Bacon. Naturali Historie, §. 413.

That the second enclosed ground be a garden, destined plants, as their melioration, acceleration, retardation.

Cowley. The College.

Then did th' allotted hour of dawning right
First strike our ravish'd sight;
Which malice or which art no more could stay,
Than witches' charms can a retardment bring
To the resuscitation of the day,
Or resurrection of the Spring.
Id. On his Majesty's Restoration.

His phrenzy soon the proud blasphemers felt;
Felt that, without my fertilizing power,
Suns lost their force, and Niles o'erflow'd in vain.
Nought could retard me. Thomson. Liberty, pt. ii.

Metaphysicks not only succeeded physicks and mythology in the manner here observed, and became as great a fund of superstition, but they were carried still farther, and corrupted all real knowledge, as well as retarded the progress of it.—Bolingbroke. Human Reason, Ess. 2.

RETCH, v. } Also written reck, (qv.)
RETCHLESS. } i. e. to heed, to care. See RETCHLESSLY. } also WRETCHLESS.

I rede thee love away to drive,
That maketh the retch not of thy live,
The folly more fro day to day Shall growe, but thou it put away.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

The roote springeth through hot brenning
Into disordinate desiring,
For to kissen and embrace,
And at hir lust them to solace,
Of other thing love retetheth nought.—Id. Ib.

Daunceth he merry that is mirthlesse,
Who should recke of that is retchlesse.
Id. The Assembly of Fowls.

And retchlesse of hys life, he gan both syghe and grone.
Surrey. Complaint of a dying Louer.

We retchlesly discharge our memory of those.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

RETECTION. Lat. Retectus, past part. of retegere, to uncover, to discover, to disclose.
Discovery, disclosure.

A liquor may alter the colour of a body, by freeing it from those things that hindered it from appearing in its genuine colour; and though this may be said to be rather a restoration of a body to its own colour, or a retention of its native colour than a change, yet still there intervenes in it a change of the colour which the body appeared to be of before this operation.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 685.

RETI'RING, n. } To draw back or withdraw;
 to move or cause to move backwards; to recede;
 to withdraw, (sc.) to a place of secrecy, or privacy, or solitude; to secrete, to seclude.

It was greatly for their saueguard, that they retired by lytle and lytle without appearance of any feare.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, b. viii.

Richarde Neuell, gentleman, then steward of the houshold, perceiuing his retire, came by and by vnto him, and after gentle intertainment demanded of him whether he would speake with my lord or no.

Be but vaine shadows to this safe retyre

Of life, which here in lowlinesse ye lead.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

They, missing the other day's turnings and places of retire, were now compelled to fight all on a front in the plain field.

North. Plutarch, p. 341.

She knew the tumult of a large family unfit for the quiet meditations of a prophet: retiredness is most meet for the thoughts of a seer.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Elisha with the Shunamite.

And then with gestures full of grave respect

The duke he to his own apartment led;

To each distinct retirements did direct,

And all the wounded he ordain'd to bed.

Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 6.

For there groweth firme lande not onely by that which rivers bring in (as the Islands Echinades, which were heaped and raised up by the river Achelous; and so by Nilus the greater part of Ægypt, into which, if we beleue Homer, from the Island Pharus there was a cut by sea of a day and night's sailing:) but also by the retiring and going backe of the sea.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 85.

To them the king: No longer I detain

Your friendly care: retire, ye virgin train!

Retire, while from my weary'd limbs I lave

The foul pollution of the briny wave.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

The nations of these women are on the south side of the river in the provinces of Topago, and their chiefest strengths and retracts are in the islands situate on the south side of the entrance.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 638.

The Englishmen geuen to couetousnes of spoyle, and desire of rauine, neither chased nor folowed their enemies, but beyng content with their prey and gaine began to retraite towarde the syege again.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 10.

The death of these two so hardye young men, and of the rest, moued Alexander greatly: yet perceiuing no remedye in y^e matter, caused the retrait to be sounded.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 241.

Upon her eyelids many graces sate,
Under the shadow of her even browes,
Working belgardes and amorous retrate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

She is the mighty queene of Faery,
Whose faire retraitt I in my shield doe beare.

Id. Ib. c. 9.

So furiously she strooke in her first heat, Whiles with long fight on foot he breathlesse was,
That she him forced backward to retreat,
And yeeld unto her weapon way to pas.

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

The earle of Lincolne, deceiued of his hopes of the countries concourse vnto him, (in which case he would haue temporized,) and seeing the businesse past retraict, resolu'd to make on where the king was, and to giue him battaile.

Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 33.

— Others more milde

Retreated in a silent valley, sing
With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroic deeds and hapless fall
By doom of battel.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— O glorious he, beyond

His daring peers! when the retreating horn
Calls them to ghostly halls of grey renown,
With woodland honours grac'd.

Thomson. Autumn.

Both thought it was the wisest course
To wave the fight, and mount to horse,
And to secure, by swift retreating,
Themselves from danger of worse beating.

Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

Of all his works, creative bounty burns
With warmest beam; and on your open front
And liberal eye, sits, from his dark retreat
Inviting modest want.

Thomson. Spring.

RETRENCH, v. } Fr. Retrencher, re, and RETRENCHING, n. } trencher, or trancher, to cut RETRENCHMENT. } or carve, from trunc-are, to cut off.

To cut or lop off, (sc. all superfluity or superabundance;) to curtail, to prune or pare away. Also equivalent to—to Entrench, (qv.)

(As if he had meant to suffer like a martyr for the truth) he told us flatly, that he was born in the Low Countreys at Delft. This retrenched all farther examination of him; for thereby he was intelligible.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 571.

What is natural is reasonable, but what is extravagant and beyond bounds ought to be retrenched; and it is a fault not to do it.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The ceremonies of the law of Moses in the worship of God were retrenched, and a more inward devotion, a more reasonable service were established.—Bolingbroke. Fragments, § 75.

I rather wish than expect that you should give yourself the trouble, by transpositions of some and retrenchments in others, to link them into a coherent discourse.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 716.

— Resign'd

To sad necessity, the cock foregoes
His wonted strut; and, wading at their head
With well-consider'd steps, seems to resent
His alter'd gait and stateliness retrench'd.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

All ancient books, having been preserved by transcription, were liable, through ignorance, negligence, or fraud, to be corrupted in three different ways, that is to say, by retrenchings, additions, and alterations.

Harris. Philological Inquiries.

It [Gulliver's Travels] appeared in the November following, (1726,) with several retrenchments and alterations, owing to the timidity of the printer, of which Swift complains heavily in his correspondence.

Scott. Memoirs of Swift, § 6.

RETRIBUTION. } tribuire; Sp. Retribuir; RETRIBUTORY. } Lat. Retribuere, (re, and RETRIBUTIVE. } tribuere, to give to three, (tribus) to part, to apportion.) See DISTRIBUTE.

RET

To return the part, portion, or allotment; generally, to return, to restore, to requite, to repay, to remunerate.

We maie note and learne. First to consider and learne the righteous retribution and wrath of God from heauen vpon all iniquitie and vnrighteous dealing of men.

Fox. Actes, p. 155.

I came to tender you the man you have made,
And like a thankful stream to retribute
All you, my ocean, have enrich'd me with.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act iii. sc. 2.

Indeed, she is not dead! but laid to sleepe
In earth, till the last trumpe awake the sheepe
And goates together, whither they must come
To heare their judge and his eternall doome;
To haue that finall retribution,
Expected with the fleshe's restitution.

B. Jonson. Elegie on Lady Digby.

Such a theism as acknowledges not onely a God or omnipotent understanding being, but also natural justice and morality founded in him and derived from him; nevertheless no liberty from necessity anywhere and therefore no distributive or retributive justice in the world.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref. p. ii.

Neither is it the pleasure of the Almighty to defer the retributory comforts of his mourners till another world: even here he is ready to supply them with abundant consolations.—Bp. Hall. Remaines, p. 183.

But yet in the state of nature one man comes by no absolute or arbitrary power to use a criminal, when he has got him in his hands, according to the passionate heats or boundless extravagancy of his own will, but only to retribute to him, as far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression.

Locke. Of Civil Government, c. 2. s. 8.

The taxes then given were given by way of retribution; which was generally the method in her time.

Bolingbroke. Remarks on the History of England.

If vice receiv'd her retribution due
When we were visited, what hope for you?

Cowper. Expostulation.

RETRIEVE, v. } To retrieve (Skinner says)
RETRIEVER, n. } is to find again. Fr. Ré- RETRIEVABLE. } trouver; It. Ritrovare, (re, RETRIEVING, n. } and trouver, to find; Ger.
Treffen.) See CONTRIVE.

To find again; to discover, to recover, restore, regain, repair.

For their boundless running on often so confounds the reader that, having once lost himself, [he] must either give off unsatisfied, or uncertainly cast back to retrieve the escaped sense, and to find way again into his matter.

Daniel. Defence of Rhyme.

We'll have a flight at mortgage statute, band,
And hard but we'll bring wax to the retrieve.

B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1.

But Fame said, Take heed how you lose me, for if you do, you will run a great hazard never to meet me again, there's no retrieving of me.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 14.

He [Beza] avers solemnly that the reformed had been so far from discarding the eucharistical sacrifice, that they only had most strictly preserved it, or rather retrieved it, fixing it upon its true and ancient basis.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 271.

With this they all were satisfy'd,
As men are wont o' th' bias'd side,
Applauded the profound dispute,
And grew more gay and resolute,
By having overcome all doubt,
Than if it never had fall'n out;
And, to complete their narrative,
Agreed t' insert this strange retrieve.

Butler. The Elephant in the Mogn.

If you hear who it is to be given to, pray let me know; for I interest myself a little in the history of it, and rather wish somebody may accept it that will retrieve the credit of the thing, if it be retrievable, or ever had any credit.

Gray. Let. 28. To Mr. Mason.

RETROACTIVE. Fr. Rétro-actif.
That which can or may act backwards, upon things done in time back or past.

It will be said, perhaps, which has been hinted already, that as the death of Christ had a retroactive effect on those that lived and died before they were redeemed, so it may be beneficial to those who never heard of it since.

Bolingbroke. Fragments, § 38.

His [lord Molesworth's] motion was not literally adopted; but a bill of pains and penalties was introduced, a retroactive statute, to punish the offences which did not exist at the time they were committed.

Gibbon. Memoirs of his own Life.

RETROCESSION. See to CEDE. Fr. Rétrocéder; Sp. Retroceder.
Motion backwards.

RETROGRADE, adj. } Ritrogradare; Sp. Re-
RETROGRADA'TION. } trogradar; Lat. Retro- RETROGRE'SSION. } gradiri, to step backwards.

To step or go back, to recede, to retire, to return, to revert; to move reversely.

And if he be in the west side in that condicion, than is he retrograde.—Chaucer. Astrolabe, Conclusion.

Then and not before the numbers begin to be withdrawn, and the planets to go backward and be retrograde.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 16.

Bring new-defended faith against faith known;
Weary the soul with contrarieties;
Till all religion becomes retrograde,
And that fair 'tire the mask of sin be made.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

The starres themselves are thought to returne more speedily in their retrogradation than in their direct course forward.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 17.

And so forth to Adam, as you shall find it by retrogradation from the 32d verse vnto the first of the fifth chapter of Genesis.—Holinshed. Historie of England, b. vi. c. 10.

For retrogradation, the shadow went back ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz.—Bp. Hall. Ser. on Psalm cvii. 34.

And thus we see the account established upon the arise or descent of the stars can be no reasonable rule unto distant nations at all, and by reason of their retrogression, but temporary unto any one.—Brown. Vul. Errours, b. vi. c. 3.

When a parliament, acting against the declared sense of the nation, would have appeared as surprising a phenomenon in the moral world, as a retrograde motion of the sun or any other signal deviation of things from their ordinary course in the natural world?—Bolingbroke. On Parties, Let. 4.

And indeed what satisfactory account can be given of the varying lengths and vicissitudes of days and nights, and the eclipses of the sun and moon, the stations and retrogradations observed in planets, and other familiar celestial phenomena.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 429.

Two geomantic figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

RETROMINGENT. } Lat. Retro, and min-RETROMINGENCY. } gens, pres. part. of

Except it be in retromingents, and such as couple backward.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

The last foundation was retromingency or pissing backward.—Id. Ib.

RETRUDE, v. } Lat. Re-trudere, to thrust RETRU'SE. } back. See INTRUDE.
To thrust, shove, or push back.

The term of latitude is breadthlesse line;
A point the line doth manfully retrude
From infinite processe; site doth confine
This point; take site away, it's straight a spark divine.

More. Of the Soul, pt. ii. b. ii. c. 2.

I have a sense of something in me while I thus speak, which I must confess is of so retruse a nature that I want a name for it, unless I should adventure to term it Divine sagacity.—H. More. General Pref.

RETUND, v. Sp. Retundir; Lat. Re-tundere; re, and tundere, to beat or bruise.

To beat or bruise back; to repel; to beat back, (sc.) the edge, and, consequentially, to blunt.

This ignorant and conceited confidence of both may be *retund*ed and confuted from hence.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 627.

This [the skull] is covered with skin and hair which serve to keep it warm, being naturally a very cold part, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke that shall be dealt it, and retund the edge of any weapon.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

 clusyonys were takē.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 51.

Five daies there be since he (they say) was slaine,
 And four since Florimell the court forwent,
 And vowed never to returne againe
 Till him alive or dead she did invent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

— My mother-queene (fam'd for her silver feet)
 Told me two fates about my death, in my direction meet:
 The one, that if I here remaine, t' assist our victorie,
 My safe returne shall neuer lue, my fame shall neuer die:
 If my returne obtaine successe, much of my fame decays,
 But death shall linger his approach, and I lue many dayes.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

But I would neuer credit in you both Least cause of sorrow; but well knew the troth
 Of this thine owne returne: though all thy friends
 I knew, as well should make returnlesse ends.
Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. xiii.

Was it the strength of this tongue, valiant lord,
 In that black hour that sav'd you from the sword?
 Or was my breast expos'd alone to brave
 A thousand swords, a thousand ships to save?
 The hopes of your return!—Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

The chapmen that give highest for this can make most profit by it, and those are the returners of our money.—Locke.

But if the wand'rer his mistake discern,
 Judge his own ways, and sigh for a return,
 Bewilder'd once, must he bewail his loss
 For ever and for ever? No—the cross!
Cowper. Progress of Errour.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

— Nought could here be done,
 But straight was known as soon as once design'd.
 Court, council-chamber, closet, all were won,
 To be revealers of the prince's mind.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

Though kings still hug suspicion in their bosoms,
 They hate the causers; love to hear secrets too,
 Yet the revealers still fare the worse,
 Being either thought guilty of ends or weakness.
Shirley. The Merchant's Wife, Act i. sc. 3.

If all or most of the truths declared in the Epistles were to be received and believed as fundamental articles, what then became of those Christians who were fallen asleep? as St. Paul witnesses in his first to the Corinthians many were, before these things in the Epistles were revealed to them.
Locke. The Reasonableness of Christianity.

In this state of darkness and error, in reference to the true God, our Saviour found the world. But the clear revelation he brought with him dissipated this darkness; made the one invisible true God known to the world: and that with such evidence and energy, that polytheism and idolatri hath no where been able to withstand it.—Id. Ib.

And this is one reason why he permits so many heinous impieties to be concealed here on earth, because he intends to dignify that day with the revelation of them.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 13.

Divine providence, in compassion to the frailty, the imperfection, and the blindness of human reason, hath been pleased, at sundry times and in divers manners, to discover and enforce its laws by an immediate and direct revelation.
 The doctrines thus delivered we call the revealed or divine law, and they are to be found only in the Holy Scriptures.

Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 9.

Men. A guard! a guard! we, full of hearty tears,
For our good father's loss,
(For so we well may call him,
Who did beseech your loves for our succession,
Cannot so lightly over-jump his death,
As leaves his woes vengeless.

Marston. The Malecontent, Act iv. sc. 3.

— Under those bright rayes,
In which heaven's feruour hurles about the dayes;
Must I no more shine his reueger now;
Such as of old, the Iliou overthrow Witnest my anger.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

With that he drives at them with dreadfull might,
Both in remembrance of his friends late harme,
And in *revenge*ment of his owne despiht.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

— I haue belyed a lady,
The princesse of this country; and the ayre on't Reuengingly enfeeble me, or could this carle,
A very drudge of nature's, haue subdu'de me
In my profession?—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 2.

Repenting England this vengeful day
To Philip's manes did an offering bring;
England, which first, by leading them astray,
Hatch'd up rebellion to destroy her king.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Ev'n he, the king of men, the foremost name
Of all the Greeks, and most renown'd by fame,
The proud reueger of another's wife,
Yet by his own adulteress lost his life.

Id. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xi.

To despair is not only to reject the mercy which God offers, but to question his truth and sincerity, to slight his patience, to disparage his goodness, and to look upon him as a most vengeful and implacable being.

Stillington. vol. ii. Ser. 9.

Revenge impatient rose:
He threw his blood-stain'd sword in thunder down,
And, with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Was ne'er prophetic sound so full of woe.

Collins. The Passions.

Revenge is an insatiable desire to sacrifice every consideration of pity and humanity to the principle of vindictive justice.—Cogan. On the Passions, c. 1. § 3.

He smiled vengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye balls fury red, and glowing vengeance.

Dryden & Lee. Edipus.

REVE'NUE, n. Fr. Revenue, from revenir, to come back, to return.

The rent; the return of gain or profit; the income.

Whereupon it commeth to passe, that vnto this day the whole island is the king's owne fee simple, and that all the reuenues thereof pertaine vnto him.

Hackluyt. Voyages, &c. vol. i. p. 10.

And it is sayde that when king Rufus heard of this adventurous deed, he sent for the sayde knight, and gaue him certeyne of his landes and reuenues in Northumberland, and commaunded him euer afterwarde to be called Perseye, because he had perced or bored out the king's eye.

Grafton. William Rufus, an. 6.

Those hold that, by the lessening our money one-fifth, all people who are to receive money upon contracts already made will be defrauded of twenty per cent. of their due: and thus all men will lose one-fifth of their settled reuenues, and all men that have lent money one-fifth of their principal and use.—Locke. On Raising the Interest.

The king's ordinary revenue is such as has either subsisted time out of mind in the crown, or else it has been granted by parliament, by way of purchase or exchange for such of the king's inherent hereditary reuenues as were found inconvenient to the subject.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

The revenue derived from labour is called wages; that derived from stock, by the person who manages or employs it, is called profit.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

REVE'RBERATE, v. Fr. Réverbérer; It. Riverberer; Sp. Reverberar; Lat. Reverberare, (re, and verberare, to beat,) to beat back.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 49.

We suppose these great indrafts doe growe and are made by the reuerberation and reflection of that same current which, at our comming by Ireland, met and crossed vs.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 81.

Thy yongest daughter do's not loue thee least,
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sounds
Reuerbe no hollownesse.

Shakespeare. King Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

The lofty hills, this while attentively that stood,
As to survey the course of every several flood,
Set forth such echoing shouts which (every way so shrill)
With the reverberate sound the spacious air did fill.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

Both audibles and visibles will be reverberate; as in mirrors, and in ecchos.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 261.

To the reflexion of visibles small glasses suffice, but to the reverberation of audibles are required greater spaces, as hath likewise been said before.—Id. Ib. s. 270.

Moreover, the sound made by reverberation of the aire, which men call eccho, is hurtfull unto them; for they feare mightily that resounding noise, comming with a double stroke.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 19.

The heat is neuer so vehement on the hill top as in the vallie, because the reuerberation of the sunne beames either reached not so farre as the highest, or else becommeth not so strong as when it is reflected upon the lower soile.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 17.

Which shadows [in Plato's cave] they concluded to be the only substances and realities, and when they heard the sounds made by those bodies that were betwixt the light and them, or their reverberated ecchos, they imputed them to those shadows which they saw.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 19.

Such an aggregate of corpuscles as should, without breaking such frail bodies as glasses, be able in its passage thorough them, that is, in the twinkling of an eye, to melt them; which to do is wont, even in our reverberatory furnaces, to cost the active flames a pretty deal of time.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 683.

REVE'RDURE, v. It. Riverdire; Fr. Reverdir, to flourish or wax green again, (Cotgrave.)

The swete tyme of Marche was come, and the wyndes were apeased, and ye waters swaged of their rages, and the wodes reuerdured.

There fayrely them receives a gentle squyre,
Of myld demeanure and rare courtesee,
Right cleanly clad in comely sad attyre;
In word and deede that skew'd great modestee,
And knew his good to all of each degree,
Hight Reuerence.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

By then I was half way advanc'd in the room,
His worship most rev'rendly rose.

Cotton. A Voyage to Ireland, c. 2.

A fearful vision doth his soul molest;
Seeming to see in rev'rent form appear
A fair and goodly woman all distrest;
Which, with full-weeping eyes and rented hair,
Wringing her hands, as one that griev'd and pray'd.

Daniel. History of Civil Wars, b. i.

Bid yonder man come home to me and dine, (Quoth I) bespeak him reverently you see;
Scorn not his habit; little canst thou tell,
How rich a mind in those mean rags doth dwell.

Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

And they are M. Antonius his precepts, αἰδοῦ θεοῦ, revere the gods, and ἐν ἀπασὶ θεοῦ επικαλου, in every thing implore the aid and assistance of the gods.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 426.

The Greeks in shouts their joint assent declare,
The priest to reverence, and release the fair.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

About this time, says he, [Polybius,] the Athenians were governed by two men, quite sunk in their affairs; had little or no commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads.

Swift. Dissentions in Athens & Rome, c. 2.

But when the Fates, in fullness of their rage,
Spurn the hoar head of unresisting age,
In dust the reverend lineaments deform,
And pour to dogs the life-blood scarcely warm;
This, this is misery!

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

A reverential silence may well become us in so awful a subject, in which imagination has nothing to do, and of which our most refined and elevated thoughts are infinitely unworthy.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 250.

Tho' this action of his driving the buyers and sellers out of the temple [as I said] will not warrant us to do the same, because we have not the same authority that he had, yet it will teach us that we ought every one of us to behave ourselves reverently in the house of God.—Sharp. vol. v. Dis. 9.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Masorites to number not only the sections and lines but even the words and letters of the Old Testament.—Government of the Tongue.

They [Jews] made him an object of terrour more than of awe and reverence, and their religion was a system of the rankest superstition; for nothing can be more true than what St. Austin quotes somewhere from Varro, that they who are religious revere, and the superstitious fear, God.

Bolingbroke. Fragments, § 75.

He [Plato] made the system of an intellectual world, and, in the respect I am going to mention, as absurdly as many others, but more reverentially toward the Supreme Being.

Id. Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

When we presume to talk of the Supreme Being, it becomes us to proceed humbly and reverentially, with a consciousness that our conceptions are all drawn from experience of what has passed among ourselves; and the same experience may evince that every thing passing with us is by no means applicable to him.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 24.

RE'VE'RIE. Fr. Resver, to rave. Resverie, a raving, idle talking, dotage, trifling, folly, vain fancy, fond imagination, (Cotgrave.)

He [Prince of Wales] caused the walles to be vndermined, and quite reversed into the ditch.
Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1370.

Wherby he fyndyng the pore woman to susteyn wronges, reversed his iugement, and, according to truth and iustyce, gaue to her that she demanded.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

But [he] was deprived of all his dignitie, for some default (I cannot tell what) in his answer; and furthermore, after his reversion home, was spoiled also of all that he brought with him.—Fox. Actes, p. 152.

And so there the reuersion of the countie of Bloyes after his discease was solde for the somme of two hundred thousande frankes.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 182.

None of them all lacked, insomuch that, after the feast was done, the Apostles by the Lord's commandement gathered together the reuersion, and therewith fylled twelue

Where be the batteilles, where the shield and speare,
And all the conquests which them high did reare,
That matter made for famous Poets verse,
And boastfull men so oft abasht to heare?
Beene they all dead, and laide in dolefull herse?
Or doen they only sleepe, and shall again reverse?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

For the faire damzell from the holy herse
Her love sicke hart to other thoughts did steale;
And that old dame said many an idle verse,
Out of her daughter's hart fond fancies to reverse.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

Fr. Revertir; It. Rivèrtere; Sp. Reverter; Lat. Revertere, (re, and vertere), to turn back.

To turn back or return;
to turn over, to overturn;
to turn in a contrary or opposite direction or position;
to come or bring back again, to change or alter to the contrary; to repeal.

To reverse and to revert differ only in the application. Reversion, in Udal,
—the residue.

The king likewise in the reversall of the attainders of his partakers, and, discharging them of all offences incident to his service and succour, had his will; and Acts did passe accordingly.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 12.

Nor in prison, nor a suitor at the court,
Nor beg'd the reversion of some great man's place.
Webster. The Duchess of Malfy, Act iii. sc. 1.

By which means, and quitting the king of his promised reversionary officers and a piece of honest policy, (which I have not time to relate,) he got a grant of it from his majesty.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 26.

For which his faith with her he fast engaged,
And thousand voves from bottome of his hart,
That, all so soone as he by wit or art
Could that atchieve whereto he did aspire,
He unto her would speedily revert.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

This eagle (whose prophecies among the Britons, with the later of Merlin, have been of no less respect than those of Bacis were to the Greeks, or the Sybillines to the Romans) foretold of a reverting of the crown, after the Britons, Saxons, and Normans, to the first again.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion. Selden. Illustrations, s. 2.

— The bending head, deprest
Beneath his helmet, nods upon his breast;
His shield revers'd o'er the fallen warrior lies;
And everlasting slumber seals his eyes.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet as the poet often serves to unriddle a reverse.
Addison. On Ancient Medals.

After his death there were reversal letters found among his papers.—Burnet. Own Time. Charles II.

This is properly credible which is not apparent of itself, nor certainly to be collected, either antecedently by its cause, or reversely by its effect, and yet though by none of these

Thomson. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

The expressions therefore of seeking the Lord and delighting in his messenger are ironical, expressing the very reverse of that which they seem to affirm.
Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 31.

Each court of appeal, in their respective stages, may, upon hearing the matter of law in which the error is assigned, reverse, or affirm the judgment of the inferior courts, but none of them are final, save only the house of peers, to whose judicial decisions all other tribunals must therefore submit and conform their own. And thus much for the reversal or affirmance of judgments at law.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 25.

He took out of his pocket this letter, for want of a better supply of paper at hand; and on the cover of it, over the direction, which now stands among the notes, intermixed reversedly with them, noted from Dr. London's mouth the Retaine their former liu'ries to be seene,

When he reuiues them; his expected eye
Preseru'd their beauty, ready oft to die.

Beaumont. Of the Prince's Returne.

Count Gondomar's coming was a great advantage unto me, who hath done me many favours, besides a confirmation of the two sentences of view and review, and of the execution against the viceroy.—Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 14.

And back the drooping war-ship comes again,
Dispirited, and thin; her sons asham'd
Thus idly to review their native shore;
With not one glory sparkling in their eye,
One triumph on their tongue.—Thomson. Britannia.

Who, form'd to dullness from their very youth,
Lies of the day prefer to gospel truth,
Pick up their little knowledge from reviews,
And lay out all their stock of faith in news.

Churchill. The Author.

Who shall dispute what the reviewers say?
Their word's sufficient; and to ask a reason,
In such a state as theirs, is downright treason.

RE-VISIT, v. Fr. Révisiter; It. Rivisitare; Lat. Revisitare, (re, and visitare, a frequentative from videre, to see.) In Froissart it is equivalent to revise; to look back upon; to look over again, to overlook. Generally,—
To visit or come to see again.

Also they saye that ye haue not dilygently *reuisyt*ed nor

Of woven arborets, and oft the rills
Still streaming fresh revisit, to allay Thirst inextinguishable.—Philips. Cider, b. i.

Tell what were the mutual feelings when first you revisi- sited your families and friends!—of the child returning to the fond parent's care—of the father receiving back from the grave the joy, the solace of his age—of the husband restored to the wife of his bosom—of the wife, not yet the widow, again embracing her yet living lord!

The inventor of this argument, or rather the reviver of that which had been before used by some scholasticks, affirmeth it to be as good a demonstration for the existence of a God, from his idea, as that in geometry for a triangle's having three angles equal to two right is from the idea of a triangle.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 721.

And now for a litle space grace hath bene shew'd from

After which the duke, by the queen-mother's mediation, is reconciled to the king; who, for feare of his power, by an edict of re-union, admits no religion but the popish, promiseth never to make peace, &c.

Prynne. Sovereigne Power, App. p. 39.

We conclude, therefore, that the Christian mystery of the resurrection of life consisteth not in the soul's being re- united to these vile rags of mortality, these gross bodies of ours, (such as now they are,) but in having them changed into the likeness of Christ's glorious body, and in this mortal's putting on immortality.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 799.

I believe the immortality of the soul; I believe the resurrection of the body, and its reunion with the soul.

Knatchbull. On the New Testament Translation, p. 93.

For even in such experiments it appears that when the form of a natural body is abolished, and its parts violently scattered by the bare re-union of some parts after the former manner, the very same matter the destroyed was before made of may, without addition of other bodies, be brought again to constitute a body of the like nature with the former, though not of equal bulk.

Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

REVO'KE, v. Fr. Révoquer; It. Rivocare; Sp. Revocar; Lat. Revocare, (re, and vocare,) to call back; to recall; to repeal.
REVO'KE, n.
REVO'KEMENT.
RE'VOCABLE.
RE'VOCATE, v.
REVOCA'TION.
REVOCA'TORY, adj. To recall, to repeal; to countermand; to restrain.

Revoke, n.—common in playing cards, when a party does not follow suit, when in his power to do so.

If your holiness did grant us [Henry VIII.] all those things justly, ye did unjustly revoke them; and if by good and truth the same was granted, they were not made frustrate nor annihilate without fraud; so as if there were no deceit nor fraud in the revocation, then how wrongfully and subtilly have been done those things that have been done!—Burnet. Records, vol. i. b. ii. No. 42.

Some remedy should be found for these evils, either by the consent and agreement of rich men's wives, which with their example should revoque other againe vnto better minds.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 8.

To the which question, of one assent, they sayde, that if the same iudgement were now to be geuen, the same justices and sergeaunt aforesayde would not giue the same, because it seemed to them that the same iudgement is reuocable and is erroneous in euery part.—Grafton. Rich. II. an. 10.

Which it could not bee attained at the pope's handes, vnlesse the king would recompence and requite the same by reuocating of such statutes as were made and enacted here in the high court of parliament, for the surety of succession and establishment of the realme.

Fox. Actes. Hen. VIII. p. 980.

Meaning by this exile to appease the furious rage of the outrageous people, and that pacified, to reuocate him to his olde estate, as the queene's chefe friend and counsailler.

Grafton. Hen. VI. an. 28.

And pardon comes.—Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act i. sc. 2.

Though the grant be revocable, in this case, upon the person's returning to his old sins, yet it is a real and a present grant; like as the lord, in the gospel, really forgave his servant all his debt, but revoked the grant upon that servant's new misbehaviour.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 423.

We should very nicely and curiously examine our consciences, those faithful records and registers of our actions, and wherever we find the least item of an uncanceled guilt, immediately cross it out by a hearty sorrow for and moral revocation of it.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

But hold—the fates revoke their first decree,

And Œdipus revives alone in thee.

Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. ii.

A devise by writing may be also revoked by burning, cancelling, tearing, or obliterating thereof by the deviser, or in his presence and with his consent.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. xxxii. c. 23.

REVOLT, v. Fr. Révolter; It. Rivoltare; REVOLT, n. from revolutum, past part. of REVOLTER. revolvere, to roll, to turn back.
REVOLTING, n. To turn or cause to turn back; to repel or drive back; to reject or cast back; to turn back or away from, (sc.) obedience, allegiance;—to rebel; to desert, to forsake.

Revolts, (Shakespeare.)—those who have revolted; revolvers.

He made al such feare him, as before were revolted, and regarded him little.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 11.

For they had not lost the battaile at such tyme as the messengers were dispatched that brought the newes of their revolt.—Id. Ib. p. 184.

Eumenes, therefore, gettinge the vpper hande in two pitched fieldes together, vpheld and maintained his side for a while, whiche was not a little empairod by the reuoltinge of his adherentes.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 72.

The king, in this mean time, (I know not how,)

Was drawn into some actions forth the land,

T' appease the Irish, that revolted now.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

— The Romaines

Must, or for Brittaines flay vs or receiue vs

For barbarous and vnnaturall reuolts

During their vse, and slay vs after.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 4.

— As a thunderbolt

Perceth the yielding ayre, and doth displace

The soaring clouds into sad shoures ymolt;

So to her yold the flames, and did their force revolt.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

'Tis in their wills, their mercies, or revenges,

And these revolts in you shew mere rebellions.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act v. sc. i.

Of indignation at those practical revolvers that, having begun in the spirit, will needs end in the flesh; that having made a shew of godliness, deny the power of it in their lives.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

What mercy soever may abide well meaning ignorance, let the wilful revolter make account of damnation.

Id. Sermon on Galatians, vol. i.

Those blessings may all be forfeited, or finally lost, if a person revolts from God, either for a time or for ever; and then such person is no longer in a regenerate state, or a state of sonship, with respect to any saving effects; but still God's original grant of adoption or sonship in baptism stands in full force, to take place as often as any such revolvers shall return, and not otherwise.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 348.

In the simplicity of my heart [I] would needs try if I could make the deists believe too. I found it was this that most revolted him.—Warburton. On several Occas. Reflections, pt. i.

But sin marr'd all; and the revolt of man,

That source of evils not exhausted yet,

Was punish'd with revolt of his from him.

Couper. Task, b. vi.

REVOLUTIONARY.

REVOLUTIONIST.

REVOLUTIONIZE, v.

roll back.

To roll or turn back; to roll, turn, carry, or bear round, or in a circle; (met.) to turn over in the mind, to consider, to contemplate.

Revolution, (met.)—a turning back or away, (sc.) from a present, to a former state, or (generally) from the present course or progression; and hence, an entire change, (sc.) in the form of government, or in some especial department.

Myne owne yearthly ladie, (quod I tho) and yet remember to your worthnesse how long sithen by many reuoluyng of yeres, &c.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

But the daye naturell, that is to sayne, 24 houres, is the reuolution of the equinoctiall, with as moche partye of the zodiake, as the sonne of his proper mouinge passethe in the meane while.—Id. The Conclucions of the Astrolabe.

The cause of your dreame in your slepe was this, you being kinge reuolued in mynde as ye laye in bedde what was to come aftir.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 2.

And after in reuoluyng diuers bokes, serchyng in diuers libraries, and also speakyng with diuers sages of diuers realmes, finally founde this tretise in Florence.

The Golden Boke. The Prologue, p. 11.

I remember, on a day, I reuolued the registers in the capitol, I red a right meruallous thyng.—Id. Let. 12.

They vnderstanding verie well the reuolutions of the time, and their appointed courses.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 79.

Ere he to gentle sleepe his eyes will lay,

His thoughts reuolue the actions of the day,

What houres from me with dull neglect haue runne.

Beaumont. Ausonius, Idyll. 16.

— Us then, to whom the thrice three yeere

Hath fild his reuoluble orbe, since our arrivall here,

I blame not, to wish home much more.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Nay, but the terme, sayd he, is limited,

That in this thraldome Britons shall abide;

And the iust reuolution measured

That they as straungers shal be notifide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

A little before he had said the word was divine substance; and he here speaks of the godhead being communicated or imparted to the Son, and revolving again to the Father as the head or fountain.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 458.

Heaven has to all allotted, soon or late,
Some lucky revolution of their fate.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

From above and behind each eye arises an elegant yellowish white crest, revolved backward as a ram's horn.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 7.

— She dreads

An instant's pause, and lives but while she moves.

Its own reuolency upholds the world.—Couper. Task, b. i.

That this revolution was performed in the same space of time in the beginning of the world as now, I would not over confidently affirm.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

In truth, it were easy to find causes of his extraordinary success in the political principles of the times in which he first arose, independent of any uncommon talents of his own, principally in the revolutionary phrensy, the spirit of treason and revolt, which prevailed in the countries that were the first prey of his unprincipled ambition.

Id. vol. ii. Ser. 29.

It will, perhaps, be said, and with some reason, that in this instance, at least, the writer has followed those alarmists who, on any men of learning belonging to that country being mentioned, immediately ally them to the revolutionists, without regard to difference of opinion, or distance of time.

Smith. Life, p. 24.

Not that his neighbour had indeed a place,
But would accept one—that was his disgrace;
Who, in his turn, was sure my father plann'd
To revolutionise his native land.

Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. x.

RE-VO'MIT, v. Fr. Révomir; Lat. Revomere, to vomit or throw forth, back again. See EVOMIT, VOMIT.

To throw forth, cast forth, eject back again.

Wherefore, like as death was of might to swallow hem, so was it not able to holde him, beeing once deuoured, but cast hem up again, as it was therto constrained, ye third daie euen as the whale did reuomit the prophete Jonas.

Udal. Actes, c. 2.

Plato compareth lawes to pillis, medecyns or pocons, which if ye syke bodye reuomite, there is no helth to be looked fore.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, p. 87.

They poure the wine downe the throate without more ado, that they might cast it vp againe and so take more in the place, vomiting and reuomiting twice or thrice together that which they haue drunke.

Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. s. 3.

REVULSE, v. Fr. Révulsion; Lat. Revulsio, from revulsus, past part. of revellere, (re, and vellere, to tear.)

To tear back; to tear, pluck, or pull away.

Revulsion is also "the drawing or forcing of humours from one part of the body into an other," (Cotgrave.)

There is a fifth way, stanching of blood, also in use, to let blood in an adverse part, for a revulsion.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 66.

In his sicknesses, if they were not so violent to make the recollection of thoughts impossible, he never intermitted study, but rather re-infore'd it then as the most appropriate revulsive and diversion of pain.

Fell. Life of Hammond, p. 16.

The plethora evacuated, you may endeavour revulsion to the contrary parts by friction, cupping, fontanels, &c.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 19.

— There she fix'd,

Then suddenly reuuls'd the brazen point,

Rending him as she pull'd.—Couper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

The new produce and the new capital which has been created, if one may say so, by the colony trade, maintain in Great Britain a greater quantity of productive labour than what can have been thrown out of employment by the revulsion of capital from other trades of which the returns are more frequent.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 7.

RE-WAKE, v. i. e. to waken, or awaken again.

She oft him kist, and shortly for to saine,

Him to reawaken she did all her pain.

And it is certain, the action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of duty and of religion, and rewardable by the grace and favour of God, if done in obedience to the command of our superiors.—Bp. Taylor. Holy Living, s. 2.

What can be the praise or rewardableness of doing that which a man cannot chuse but do? Goodman. Winter Evening Conf. p. 2.

But this religious fear is not a fear of God as a meer arbitrary omnipotent Being, much less as hurtful and mischievous (which could not be disjoyned from hatred;) but an awful regard of him as of one who is essentially just, and as well a punisher of vice and wickedness, as a rewarder of vertue.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 660.

Which good and evil, pleasure or pain, attending our observance, or breach of the law, by the decree of the law-maker, is what we call reward and punishment. Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

That the victory of our reason might thro' the difficulty of it be rendered more glorious and rewardable, God hath furnished its antagonist, our sense, with the weapons of worldly temptation to assault and oppose it. Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 4.

RE-WRITE, v. To write again, over again.

Write, and re-write, blot out, and write again, And for its swiftness ne'er applaud your pen. Young, Ep. 2. To Mr. Pope.

RHABDOMANCY. Gr. ῥαβδομαντεία; ῥαβδος, a rod, and μαντεία, prophecy. See the quotation.

As for the divination or decision from the staff, it is an augural relique, and the practise thereof is accused by God himself: My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them. Of this kind of rhabdomancy was that practised by Nabuchodonosor in that Caldean miscellany, delivered by Ezekiel. Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.

RHAPSODY. } Fr. Rapsodie; It. Rapsodia; Lat. Rapsodia; Gr. ῥαψωδία, contextura carminum, (from ῥαπτ-ειν, suere, to sow, and ὠδή, a song;) said to have been originally applied to the songs of Homer, connected and collected into an entire poem, (or from ῥαβδος, a rod.)

Rapsodie, a joyning of diverse verses together, (Bullockar.) An improper collection or confused heaping up of many sentences, (Minshew.) See the quotation from Beloe.

'Tis hard to speake things common, properly; And thou maist better bring a rhapsody Of Homer's forth in acts, then of thine owne, First publish things unspeaken and unknowne. B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

They [Prynne's Works] are all in the English tongue, and by the generality of scholars are looked upon to be rather rhapsodical and confus'd, than any way polite or concise, yet for antiquaries, critics, and sometimes for divines, they are useful.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

In these lines the writings of the Provençal poets are principally alluded to, in which simplicity is generally sacrificed to the rhapsodies of romantic love. Langhorne on Collins. Ode to Simplicity.

Select ballads in the old Scottish dialect, most of them of the first-rate merit, are also interspersed among those of our ancient English minstrels; and the artless productions of these old rhapsodists are occasionally confronted with specimens of the composition of contemporary poets of a higher class; of those who had all the advantages of learning in the times in which they lived, and who wrote for fame and for posterity.—Percy. Reliques, Pref. p. xiv.

According to the first derivation [a rhapsodist] signifies a poet, author of various songs or poems which are connected together, making one poem of which the different parts may be detached and separately recited. According to the second, it signifies a singer, who holding his branch of laurel, recites either his own compositions or those of some celebrated poet. Beloe. Herodotus, b. v. Note 85.

RHE/TOR. } Fr. Rhétteur, rhétoriquier, rhétoriser; It. Retòre; Lat. Rhetor, a speaker; Gr. ῥητωρ, from ῥεειν, dicere, to speak. A rhetorician, literally, is a speaker; hence, one who studies, practises, teaches speaking, as an art. See the quotations from Wilson and Blair.

Rhetorick was subsequently extended to include written composition; it should be founded upon Logic.

Thyng that al the worlde wot, wherefore sholdest thou spare To rehercen hit by retoryk.—Piers Plouhman, p. 203.

It muste ben a rethor excellent, That coude his colours longing for that art, If he shuld hire descriven ony part. Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,292.

And with rhetorike come forthe musyke, a damosell of oure house, that singeth nowe lighter modes or prolacions and now heauier.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

With boke in hand, than come Mercurivs, Right eloquent and ful of rethorie, With polite termes and delicious, With penne and inke to report al redie. Id. The Testament of Creseide.

For thilke schole of eloquence Belongeth not to my science, Upon the forme of rhetorike My wordes for to peinte and pike.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Rhetorique is an arte to set forth by vtterance of words, matter at large, or, (as Cicero doth say,) it is learned, or rather an artificiall declaration of the mynd, in the handling of any cause called in contention, that may through reason largely be discussed.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 1.

Then he maketh the dead men's soules by a rhetoricall prosopopœa, to speake out of purgatory pinfolde. Fox. Actes, p. 927. Henry VIII.

My lorde hath rhetoricallye begunne his proposicion to winne his auditory.—Bale. Yet a Course, fol. 44.

Whose cause, I pray you, sir, if envie shall stirre up any wrongfull accusation, defend with your mightie rhetorike and other your rath gifts of learning, as you can. Spenser. Epistle to Maister Harvey.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues, And there be words not made with lungs; Sententious showers, O let them fall! Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw. On the Death of a Gentleman.

Hierom informe us; that those who are accustomed to rhetorical stage-plays, to sweet polished orations and poems, despise the plaine common phrase and humble stile of the Scriptures as base and sordid. Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. p. 541.

Much more must stage-plays (wherein the quintessence, the confluence of all obscenity is pithily contracted, emphatically expressed, elegantly adorned, rhetorically pronounced) be more prevalently powerfull to draw men on to these grosse lecherous sinnes.—Id. Ib. p. 385.

Certainly such rhetorizations as this cannot be intended for any but such as are of the very weakest capacity. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 10.

As no less was that before his book against the Brownists, to write a letter to a prosopopœia, a certain rhetoriz'd woman whom he calls mother, and complains of some that laid whoredom to her charge. Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

I do not heighten or rhetoricate at all in these particulars. Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 49.

Neither of them intended to extenuate the guilt of heresy at all, but to magnify another kind of guilt, as still greater according to their way of reasoning, or rather rhetorizing. Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 357.

Boldly presum'd with rhetorician pride, To hold of any question either side. Blackmore. Creation, b. iii.

The convictive evidence and rapid progress of the Gospel had so shaken and disconcerted learned pride, that the next age saw a torrent of believers pour into the church, from the schools of their rhetors, the colleges of their philosophers, and the cloisters of their priests. Warburton. Introduction to Julian.

Like quicksilver, the rhet'ric they display Shines as it runs, but grasp'd at slips away. Cowper. Progress of Errour.

The power of eloquence having, after the days of Pericles, become an object of greater consequence than ever, this gave birth to a set of men till then unknown, called rhetoricians, and sometimes sophists, who arose in multitudes during the Peloponnesian war; such as Protagoras, Prodicus, Thrasymus, and one who was more eminent than all the rest, Gorgias of Leontium. The sophists joined to their art of rhetoric a subtle logic, and were generally a sort of metaphysical sceptics.—Blair. Lect. 25.

RHINO'CEROS. Fr. Rhinocéros; It. Rinoceronte; Sp. Rinoceronte; Lat. Rhinoceros; Gr. ῥινόκερως, from ῥίς, the nose, and κερας, a horn.
See the quotation from Pliny.

For there is no beast but hath his enemy; as the cony the polcat, a sheepe the wolfe, the elephant, the rinoceros; and so of other beasts the like.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 519.

In the same solemnities of Pompey, as many times else, was shewed a rhinoceros, with one horne and no more, and the same is in his snout or muzzle.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 20.

On high-raisd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shade our humble frigates go;
Such port the elephant bears, and so defy'd

A quadrilateral figure, having equal sides and unequal angles.

The equal inclinations of the sides (which make the right angle) are stronger than the rhombe or losenge, or any other irregular square.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 15.

See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

With as much ease I'll evince clear and clean
That the crosse lines of a rhomboides,
That from their meeting to all angles presse,
Be of one length, though one from earth to heaven
Would reach, and that the other were much lesse
Than a small digit of the lowest of seven,
So as she 'pears to us, yet I could prove them even.

More. On the Soul, pt. ii. b. i.

The amianthus [is regularly figured] of parallel threads, as the pile of velvet; the selenites, of parallel plates, as in a deck of cards; and they are of a rhombick figure; Talk, of such as are rhomboid, with many other diversities.

A. S. Rim-craft, ge-rim-craft, is the craft or art of numbering; ge-riman, riman, hriman, numerare; Ger. Reimen; Dut. Riimen; Sw. Rima. Wachter and Ihre consider rhyme or rime to be of northern origin, and to have been applied to the termination of verses or parts of verses, with words or syllables of similar sounds, by northern poets, long before the practice of rhyming was known by the more southern poets. The word appears in the northern languages to have been applied generally to numerous or metrical writing, as the Gr. ῥυθμος was; and thence the French and Italian. Rhyme is found equivalent to rhythm, (qv.), but is more commonly used to denote—

Verses terminating with similar sounds: also, verse or poetry in general.

Tooke has adopted the A. S. Hrim-an.

And doth beside on rhymeless numbers tread,
Unbid iamblies flow from careless head.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 4.

Methought I fear'd, lest the horse-hoofed well
His native banks did proudly over-swell
In some late discontent, thence to ensue
Such wondrous rabblements of rhymesters new.—Id. b. i.

My lord Roscommon was more impartial; no man ever rhymed truer and evenner than he; yet he is so just as to confess, that it is but a trifle, and to wish the tyrant dethroned, and blank verse set up in its room.
Waller. Preface to his Poems.

Had the chronicler spoken of been mentioned as a poet or rhymner, I should have readily concluded that this is the man, and this the chronicle.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 238.

For what can be more absurd, said Minim, than that part of a play should be rhymed, and part written in blank verse.
Idler, No. 60.

There is, even, a Latin song in rime extant in print, which was made upon a great victory obtain'd by king Clothair the second over the Saxons, in the year 622, and serves to support the above opinion, that the vulgar poets of that period had already adopted the art of riming from the hymns of the church.—Ritson. Metrical Romances, vol. i. p. 18.

Virtue indeed meets many a rhyming friend,

Burnet. Rec. vol. ii. No. 21.

The term figurate, which we now employ to distinguish florid from more simple melody, was used to denote that which was simply rhythmical or accentual.

Mason. On Church Music, p. 28.

Rhythm differs from metre, inasmuch as rhythm is proportion, applied to any motion whatever: metre is proportion, applied to the motion of words spoken.—No English word expresses rhythmus better than the word time.
Harris. Philological Inquiries, pp. 67, 69.

RI'ANT. Fr. Riant, from rire; Lat. Ridere.
Laughing, geering, fleering, (Cotgrave.)

This melancholy kind of greatness, though it be certainly the highest, ought not to be studied in all sorts of edifices, where yet grandeur must be drawn from the other sources; with a strict caution, however, against any thing light and riant.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, s. 16. p. 2.

RIB, v. } A. S. Rib, ribbe; Ger. Ribbe, ripp;
RIB, n. } Dut. Ribbe; Sw. Ref, refben. Wachter derives from reif, incurvus, pars corporis inflexa. It may be from the A. S. Rypp-an, to rip, to reave, which, in Swedish, is ref-wa, or rif-wa, whence their ref, ref-ben. The Gr. Δούρα, trabs, from δορυ, ramus decerptus, is rendered by Chapman rib. And a rib seems to be, any thing ripped or torn asunder; and, hence, are so called—

The bones which extend separately or asunder from the back-bone; the split boards with which the sides of a ship are covered or strengthened; certain parts of a leaf or stalk; a strip; a shred.

Chaucer's ribaud, (Rom. of the Rose), whom Mr. Tyrwhitt calls "a poor labourer," "though to robben he disdaineth," yet "in the taverne all dispendeth," (sc.) his earnings and his time: this disdain of robbery appears to be a peculiarity to the many, of whom the poet is especially speaking; and, consequently, it may be inferred, the common practice or occupation of the class was rapine. Cotgrave describes a ribaud to be—"a rogue, ruffian, rascal, scoundrel, varlet, filthy fellow." And it is to filthiness, obscenity, low and vulgar scurrility, that the word ribaldry is now usually applied.

RIBBON. } because the more beautiful ribbons are of that colour. Skinner thinks the French borrowed their word from us, and that riband is re and bind, or bende, vinculum replicatum, fascia replicata, vel quod replicari potest,—a folded or redoubled bandage. Lye suggests rib and band,—a band with which the ribs were girded; perhaps a ript, stript band, as if ript or torn from a broader substance.

A band or fillet of silk, satin, &c.

Ragges ribaned with gold to weare,
For also well woll loue be sette
Under ragges as rich rotchete.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

One that, by teaching great Madonnas to foot it, has miraculously purchast a ribanded wastcote, and four clean pair of socks.

Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii. sc. 1.

Before that castle was an open plaine,
And in the midst thereof a pillar placed;
On which this shield, of many sought in vaine,
The shield of Love, whose guerdon me hath graced,
Was hang'd on high with golden ribbands laced.

RICE. Fr. Riz; It. Riso; Sp. Arroz; Lat. Oryza; Gr. Ὠρυζα. The word is said (Martinius) to be Arabic, and to have its name from its constringent or binding qualities, which are indeed ascribed to it from very early times.

As for us Italians (to say a truth) we set most store by rice, whereof (being husked and cleansed) we make grotes, like for all the world to those which other men besides doe make of barley husked. The leaves verily that this graine rice doth beare, be pulposus and fleshie, resembling porret or leekes, but that they be broader: the stem groweth a cubit high, the flower is of purple colour, and the root round like a jem or pearle.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 7.

I judge the same hath (of certain) an excellent spirit of nourishment of rise, made into a creame; for rise is in Turkey, and other countries of the East, most fed upon; but it must be thoroughly boyled in respect of the hardness of it: and also because otherwise it bindeth the body too much.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 49.

A rice field produces a much greater quantity of food than the most fertile corn field. Two crops in the year, from thirty to sixty bushels each, are said to be the ordinary produce of an acre.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. i. b. i. c. 11.

Of all-subduing sleepe.—Chapman. Homer. Odys. b. xiii.

Bring forth that British vale, and be it ne'er so rare,
But Catmus with that vale for richness shall compare.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, b. xxiv.

The first thing that is given in charge to all those that are rich in this world is, that they be not high minded, μη υψηλοφρονειν, that they do not think too well of themselves for being rich, and take occasion from thence to despise others that are in meaner circumstances than they.
Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 4.

That for which either God approves us, or wise men esteem us, or we can speak peace and content to ourselves, is not any thing without us, any thing that fortune hath given to us; but something that we may more truly call our own: something that we were neither born with, nor could anybody hinder us of, nor can be taken from us; that is to say, the riches of our minds, our virtuous and commendable qualities.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 4.

With the greater part of rich people the chief enjoyment of riches consists in the parade of riches, which, in their eye, is never so complete as when they appear to possess those decisive marks of opulence which nobody can possess but themselves.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. i. b. i. c. 11.

Columbus turned his view towards their minerals; and in the richness of the productions of this third kingdom, he flattered himself he had found a full compensation for the insignificance of those of the other two (animals or vegetables).—Id. Ib. vol. ii. b. iv. c. 7.

RICKETY. } he declares to be new in his time, and then wholly unknown to the rest of the world; he would derive it from Ger. Recken, to reach, to stretch, to extend, because in this disease the apophyses (natural prominences) of the bones stretch forth and swell out.

Insomuch that I have sometimes observed with wonder, that an excellent person (whom I need not name to you) cures the ricketts generally in children of several ages and complexions, without having hitherto failed (as she professes) in any one, by prescribing no other remedy than the single use of the above described colcotharine flowers, which I presented her with.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 245.

Whence multitudes of reverend men and critics
Have got a kind of intellectual ricketts,
And, by th' immoderate excess of study,
Have found the sickly head t' outgrow the body.
Butler. Upon Human Learning.

Surely there is some other cure for a ricketish body than to kill it.—Fuller. General Worthies, c. 11.

But even in a young animal, when the solids are too lax, (the case of ricketty children,) the diet ought to be astringent.
Arbuthnot. On the Nature of Aliments, Prop. 7.

So crude and ricketty notions, enfeebled by restraint, when permitted to be drawn out and examined, may, by the reform of their obliquities, and the correction of their virulency, at length acquire health and proportion.
Warburton. Works, vol. i. p. 145.

RID, v. } A. S. Hridd-an. "Ahreddan, RIDDANCE. } to set free, to bring or rid out of,
to draw or pull out. Ariddan, repellere, to put or rid away," (Somner.)

To free or set free, to deliver; to clear, to set or get quit of; to disencumber, to disembarass; to drive away or remove.

But after thou be once in loue, then art thou not in thine owne power, but vnder it, neither thou canst not rid thee therof when thou wouldest.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, p. 160.

Being caryed from the banquet halfe deade, he was tormented with so intollerable paine, that he desired to haue a sworde to ridde hym selfe out of it wythall.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 65.

Right glad was Calepine to be so rid
Of his young charge whereof he skilled nought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

Yet having cause to do as now he doth,
To mitigate the envy of his blood,
Thought best to lose a friend to rid a foe,
And such a one as now he doubted so.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

You haue no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would haue stirr'd vp remorse!
But if you euer chance to haue a childe,
Looke in his youth to haue him so cut off,
As, deathsmen! you haue rid this sweet yong prince!
Shakespeare. 3d Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 5.

Else surely death should be no punishment
As the great iudge at first did it ordaine,
But rather riddance from long languishment.

Spenser. Daphnaida.

Haz. A fair riddance;
We have enough o' the tribe; I am sorry I cannot Furnish her expedition with a pair
Of my own garters.

The Gamester, Act v.

Such persons as would feed, and desire to be corpulent, or to keepe their bodies soluble, and have the riddance of their bellie at commaund, shall doe well to drinke often at their repast.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 1.

He likes your house, your housemaid, and your pay,
Reduce his wages, or get rid of her,
Tom quits you with, "Your most obedient, sir."

Cowper. Truth.

RIDDLE, v. } See RADDLE.
RIDDLE, n. } A riddle or raddle,—any thing
RIDDLE, n. } made of twisted or writhed
RIDDLE, n. } sticks or twigs, wire, &c.
RIDDLE, n. } To riddle,—to twist, to wreathe, to involve.

Also to use a riddle or raddle; to shake or otherwise pass through a riddle; to sift.

In Spenser,—riddling skill, (met.) skill in things riddled; consequentially, in solving or interpreting them. A riddle, (met.)—any thing twisted, writhed, involved, or perplexed; any thing perplexing or puzzling.

And the Lord seide to Symound, Symound, lo Satanas

Brome. A Jovial Crew, Act i.

Though like the pestilence and old fashion'd love, Riddlingly it catch men, and doth remove Never, till it be starv'd out, yet their state
Is poor, disarm'd like papists, not worth hate.

Donne, Sat. 2.

—Why all this frantic pain
To construe what his clearest words contain,
And make a riddle what he made so plain?

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Perhaps, the riddling visions of the night
With contrarieties delude our sight;
And when fair scenes of pleasure they disclose,
Pain they foretel, and sure ensuing woes.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vii.

Lady R. Oh, fate! I fear thee still. Thou riddler, speak

RIDGE, v. } Rugge; Ger. Ruck; Sw. Rygg; RIDGY, } from A. S. Hrac-an; Dut. and Ger. Ruck-en; Sw. Rycka; to reach, to extend;

or, as Wachter suggests, to expand, ob longitudinem et latitudinem ejus; perhaps merely on account of the length; reaching from the neck to the break or breech of the legs. Ridge is usually applied to—

An extended line, raised from or standing above the adjoining surface; as the ridge of a mountain, a ridge of land, the ridge of a roof, the ridge of the nose.

The same ridge of the hyll, which went from the further side of the marris almost to the camp of hys enemies, was parted from theyr sayd camp with a mean valley.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 249.

As the ploughman first setteth forth his plough, and then tilleth his land, and breaketh it in furrows, and sometimes ridgeth it up.—Latimer, Ser. 4. Of the Plough.

themselves in.—Fox. Actes, p. 1102. Hen. VIII.

My heart still trembling, lest the false alarmes
That words oft strike vp, should ridiculize me.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls
Not understood, till hoarse, and all in rage,
As mockt they storm; great laughter was in heav'n
And looking down, to see the hubbub strange
And hear the din; thus was the building left Ridiculous, and the work Confusion nam'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

According to that hypothesis it would follow, that every the smallest and most contemptible animal, that could see the sun, had a higher degree of entity and perfection in it than the sun itself; a thing ridiculously absurd.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, b. i. c. 5. p. 856.

If every religionist would look upon extraneous religions with the same venerable candour and awful sobriety that he does upon his own, he might rather finde them worthy to be pitied for their falseness then laughed at for their ridiculousness.—More. Antidote against Atheism, c. 9. p. 168.

Truth, 'tis suppos'd, may bear all lights; and one of those principal lights or natural mediums by which things are to be view'd, in order to thorow recognition, is ridicule itself, or that manner of proof by which we discern whatever is liable to just railery in any subject.

Shaftesbury. On Wit & Humour, s. 1.

They indeavour to ridicule and banter all humane as well as diuine accomplishments; all virtue and government of a man's self, all learning and knowledge, all wisdom and honour, and every thing for which a man can justly be commended or be esteemed more excellent than a beast.

Clarke. Of Natural and Revealed Religion, Intro.

They are generally ridiculers of all that is truly excellent.

I've known the young, who ridicul'd his rage,
Love's humblest vassals when oppress'd with age.

Grainger. Tibullus, b. i. El. 5.

Ridicule having, from the hands of a skilful disputant, the same effect in barbarous minds with the new invented darts of Marius, which, though so weak as to break in the throw, and pierce no farther than the surface, yet sticking there, they more intangle and incommode the combatant than those arms which fly stronger and strike deeper.

Warburton. Works, vol. i. p. 148.

Jane borrow'd maxims from a doubting school,
And took for truth the test of ridicule;
Lucy saw no such virtue in a jest,
Truth was with her of ridicule the test.
Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. viii.

Kircher, bewildered as he was, had yet some ground for his rambles. He fairly followed antiquity; unluckily indeed for him, it was proved the ignis fatuus of antiquity, so he was ridiculously misled.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 4.

RIDING, i. e. trithing, (qv.) See the quotation.

Where a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called trithings. These trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where by an easy corruption they are denominated ridings; the north, the east, and the west riding.

RIDOTTO, v. } duced, (reductum), withdrawn, retired; and hence, the noun; a place of retirement, a retreat. Florio calls it—

“A home, a lodging, a withdrawing place; or other place where good companies do meet;” it is also the company or assembly.

There the sweet graces kept their court,
The nymphs, the fauns, and dryads play'd,
Thither the muses would resort,
Apollo lov'd the sylvan shade,
The gods and heroes own'd a passion
For wives and daughters of the swains,
And heroines, whilst 'twas the fashion,
Ridotto'd on the rural plains.
Cooper. The Retreat of Aristippus.

How then must four long months be worn away? Four months, in which there will be no routs, no shows, no ridottos; in which visits must be regulated by the weather, and assemblies will depend upon the moon!

Right, n.—that which is ruled, ordered, commanded, just; justice.

Righteous, (eous corrupted from wise, wis, wus)—A. S. Right-wis; rightly, wise; just, pious, (Lye.)

Right implies a rector or ruler; over man as a created being; God or the laws of God, his creator;—over man as a member of a particular state or society; the law of the land or of the society, according or consistent with those of God.

Right, also, always implies a correlative duty; if there be no such duty, the right or rule is a mere unauthorized order or command. See JUST, and LAW.

Id. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 2.

Goodnesse in actions is like vnto straitnesse; wherefore that which is done well we terme right, for as the straight way is most acceptable to him that traualleth, because by it he commeth soonest to his journeyes end: so in action, that which doth lye the euenest between us and the end wee desire, must needs bee the fittest for our use.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. s. 8.

Although there be, according to the opinion of some verie great and iudicious men, a kinde of naturall right in the noble, wise, and vertuous, to gouerne them which are of seruile disposition; neuertheless for manifestation of this their right, and men's more peaceable contentment on both sides, the assent of them who are to bee gouerned seemeth necessary.—Id. Ib. s. 10.

Learn to do well, seek judgement, relieve (or righten) the oppressed, judge the fatherlesse, plead for the widow.
Isaiah, ii. 17.

He that was pious and just was reckoned a righteous man.
 Godliness and integrity was call'd and counted righteous-nesse. And in their old Saxon English, righteous was right-wise, and righteousness was originally right-wisnesse. 'Tis the fear of God that is the beginning of wisdom; and all that seek it have a good understanding.—Felltham, Res. 48.

Or hast thou, Lord, of good men's cause no heed?
 Or doth thy iustice sleepe and silent lye?
 What booteth then the good and righteous deed,
 If goodnesse find no grace, nor righteousness no need?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

The difference of the which operations from the roote whereof they spring, maketh it needful to put two kinds likewise of sanctifying righteousness, habitual and actual.
 Habitual, that holinesse wherewith our soules are inwardly indued, the same instant, when first wee beginne to be the temples of the Holy Ghost. Actual, that holinesse which afterwards beautifieth all the parts and actions of our life;
 the holinesse for the which Enoch, Job, Zacharie, Elizabeth, and other saints, are in the scriptures so highly commended.
Hooker. Of Justification, &c. s. 2.

Nor was without example in those days;
 Wherein (as in all ages) states do take
 The side of public peace, to counterpaise
 The weight of wrong, which time may rightful make.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

Vouchsafe ye then, whom onely it concerns,
 To me those secret causes to display;
 For none but you, or who of you it learns,
 Can rightfully aread so dolefull lay.
Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

 And knew not weakness, nor could rightly scan
 To what defects his hum'rous breath obeys?
Daniel. Musophilus.

Sounds do not require to be conveyed to the sense, in a right line, as visibles do, but may be arched; though it be true, they move strongest in a right line; which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 201.

We either make a right judgement of our duty, or we make a wrong one. In the former case, we call our judgement a right conscience, in the latter we call it an erroneous conscience.—Sharp, vol. ii. A Discourse of Conscience.

This is the righteousness that I aspire after, that I may know Christ, not only by a notional belief of his doctrines, or profession of his religion, but by a spiritual experimental knowledge of him, such a knowledge that transforms me into his spirit and temper; and that I may know the power of his resurrection, i. e. that I may experience in myself all the good effects that his resurrection has a power to work in me; that I may feel the virtue and efficacy of it, in my daily dying to sin, and rising again to a new, holy, and heavenly life.—Id. Ib. vol. i. Ser. 12.

The apostle's reasoning, so far, will run thus:—"Who being essentially God, as Son of God, knew that he was rightfully and naturally equal with God, and could not be said to usurp or arrogate respect to what was his own."
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 97.

Copernicus, who rightly did condemn
 This eldest system, form'd a wiser scheme;
 In which he leaves the sun at rest, and rolls
 The orb terrestrial on its proper poles.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

So that it necessarily comes to pass, that what promotes the publick happiness, or happiness upon the whole, is agreeable to the fitness of things, to nature, to reason, and to truth; and such (as will appear by and by) is the divine character, that what promotes the general happiness is required by the will of God; and what has all the above properties must needs be right; for right means no more than conformity to the rule we go by, whatever that rule be.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. ii. c. 1.

When a man asks his right, he asks only that which it is ordered he shall have. A right conduct is, that which is ordered. A right reckoning is, that which is ordered. A right line is, that which is ordered or directed, (not a random extension) but the shortest between two points. The right road is, that ordered or directed to be pursued (for the object you have in view.) To do right is, to do that which is ordered to be done. To be in the right is, to be in such situation or circumstances as are ordered. To have right or law on one's side is, to have in one's favour that which is ordered or laid down. A right and just action is, such a one as is ordered and commanded.—Tooke, vol. ii. c. 1.

— Mansions once
 Knew their own masters; and laborious hinds,
 Who had surviv'd the father, serv'd the son.
 Now the legitimate and rightfull lord

We are in a merry world, laughing is our business; as if because it has been made the definition of man, that he is risible, his manhood consisteth in nothing else.
Government of the Tongue.

How comes lowness of style and the familiarity of words to be so much the propriety of satyr, that without them a poet can be no more a satyr, than without risibility he can be a man.—Dryden. Juvenal. Ded.

A few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there origin seems to be the A. S. Hrisc-ian, vibrare, vacillare, to brandish, to quiver, to shake; and,

thus,—

To set upon a chance; to set at hazard, to hazard, to emperil, to endanger.

Possibly it may be allowed, as a reasonable proposal, that it [interest] should be within such bounds as should not, on the one side, quite eat up the merchant's and tradesman's profit, and discourage their industry; nor, on the other hand, so low as should hinder men from risking their money in other men's hands.
Locke. On Lowering the Interest.

Besides the dead intervals of ceasing profit, which happen to money more than land, there is another reason why the profit and income of money let out should be a little higher than that of land; and that is, because money out at interest runs a greater risque than land does.—Id. Ib.

He, therefore, wisely cast about
All ways he could t' observe and smoke of the anguish of their souls, they do continually belch out against God, against themselves, and against all the world!

Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 10.

The roarer is an enemy rather terrible than dangerous.
He has no other qualification for a champion of controversy than a hardened front and a strong voice.—Rambler, No. 144.

ROB

ROAST, v. } Fr. Rost, roster; It. Arrostire.
ROAST, n. } Lye and Somner have Ge-rost-od. The Ger. Rost (Wachter) is crates, a grate, and rosten, (torrere,) to heat or dress by fire upon a grate; he observes that the Gr. ῥεσ-ειν, is to dry, to burn, and ῥεσ-ος, a grate; and that hence, by metathesis, rost and rosten may have been formed. To roast (in culinary usage) is—

To dress or cook meat, vegetables, fruits, by placing them to a fire; meat commonly being suspended and turned; then, generally, to roast is to heat, to burn, to parch; (met.) to heat or place in a hot situation; to jeer, to banter.

To rule the roast, (sc.) as king of the feast, orderer, purveyor, president; or may it not be to rule the roost, an expression of which every poultry-yard would supply an explanation? See the quotation from Jewell, in v. Roost.

The comon of the oste bouht tham hors flesch,
 Or mules or assis roste, or haf bien mete lesse.

R. Brunne, p. 175.

He coude roste, and sethe, and broile, and frie.

Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 319.

And so sitteth downe by his fire, and vpon the hard ground roseth as it were his wearie sides thus daintily stuffed.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 250.

ROB

Larceny from the person is either by privately stealing, or by open and violent assault, which is usually called robbery. Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17.

ROB. It. Robbo; Fr. Rob; the juice of black whortleberries preserved, (Cotgrave.) The word is said to be from the Arabic verb Raba or rubaba, concinnare, colligere. See Menage.

The infusion and decoction, prepared as before, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, according to the several degrees of thickness, passeth into a jelly, defrutum, sapa rob extract, which contains all the virtues of the infusion or decoction, freed onely from some of the watery parts. Arbuthnot. Nature of Aliments, c. 3.

ROBE, v. } Fr. Ròbbe; It. Ròba; Sp. Ropa;
ROBE, n. } Low Lat. Roba, rauba. In A. S. Hrif is venter, the belly, and reaf is vestimentum, a clothing or covering. In Ger. Raub is vestimentum, and reif, venter; the application of hrif, reif, to the trunk of the body may be because it is rived or severed by the lower limbs, and of reaf, and raub, to the clothing, because used to cover the trunk of the body. (See BREECHES.) A robe is now—

A vestment or clothing thrown over other garments; and usually applied to those worn on ceremonious occasions.

Hure robe was ryecher. than ich rede couthe.

Piers Plouhman, p. 24.

ROBUST.

ROBUSTIOUS.

ROBUSTIOUSLY.

ROBUSTIOUSNESS.

ROBUSTNESS.

Strong, hale, hearty; of confirmed strength or vigour; of rude strength; vigorous, rudely vigorous.

The duke of Yorke had fastened his chaine between these two strong and robustious pillars.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 33.

After they had rush'd in, he being newly awak'd, and staring upon them, and thinking to defend himself, a robust boisterous rogue knockt him down, and so the rest fell upon him, and strangled him with much ado.

Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 22.

ROC

Why fell I not from that my all-arm'd horse,
 On which I rode before the gates of Gaunt,
 Before the Belgic and Burgonian force,
 There challenging their countrie's combatant;
 Cast from my seat in some robustious course,
 That they of me the victory might vaunt?

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Indeed the common people have most robustious bodies.
 Fuller. Worthies. Cambridge-shire.

Indeed the multitude commend writers as they do fencers or wrestlers, who, if they come in robustiously, and put for it with a deal of violence, are received for the braver fellows.

B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Survey the warlike horse! didst thou invest
 With thunder his robust distended chest?

Young. Paraphrase of Job.

This proceeded rather from the robustness of the bladder, than from the weight of a taller pillar of water, than from the non-gravitation of water in the upper part of the tube on that in the lower.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 620.

No works indeed,

That ask robust, tough sinews, bred to toil,
 Servile employ! but such as may amuse,
 Not tire, demanding rather skill than force.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

ROCK.

ROCKLESS.

ROCKY.

ROCKINESS.

Fr. Roc, roche, rocher; It. Ròcca; Sp. Roca, from ρωξ, a cleft, or ρηγνυμι, to break, (Skin-ner.) But Tooke considers rock to be the past part. rog, rock, from wrig-an, to cover, and so called, because covered or nidden, (sc.) by water; though afterwards, from similarity of appearance, when left uncovered by the secession of the waters, masses of a like substance upon the coast, or upon land, received the same name; and rock, (met.)—

A sure hold, a solid foundation, a security, defence, protection. See Rock, infra.

Rockiness is not uncommon in geological works.

So that he was al to raced pecemel in a stonde.

Eche lym from other, among the roches, er he com to gronde.
 R. Gloucester, p. 22.

And what sowne is it like, quod he?

ROC

I'm clear by nature, as a rockless stream,
But they dig through the gravel of my heart,
And raise the mud of passions up to cloud me.
Dryden. Duke of Guise, Act iii. sc. 1.

My heart's so plain,
That men on every passing through may look,
Like fishes gliding in a crystal brook;
When troubled most, it does the bottom show,
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below.
Id. Conquest of Granada, Act iv. sc. 1.

What could I do, alas! encompass'd round
With steepy mountains and a rocky ground?
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. ii.

This genial intercourse, and mutual aid,
Cheers what were else a universal shade,
Calls nature from her ivy-mantled den,
And softens human rock-work into men.
Cowper. Charity.

ROCK, n. } See Rock, ante.
ROCK, v. } A rock (rog, rok) is, the part—RO'CKET. } covered by the wool—of the machine which spinsters use. Rocket, the dim. of rock, part of the dress of a bishop, or, as formerly, of women; or that with which a person is covered.
(See Tooke.) Rokett (in Froissart) appears to have been a spear, with its point or head covered, to prevent injury, as the point of a fencing foil now is; a firework, with the powder closely covered.

To rock, rook, rouk, or ruck,—to cover, to lie covered, to lie close; to take shelter.

Rooky, (in Shakespeare,) seems to be merely rooking, i. e. covering, protecting, sheltering.

To rook appears also to signify,—to play the rogue, (see ROGUE,) to practise roguery; and,
consequently, to cheat, to rob, to plunder.

For there nis no cloth sitteth bette
On damosell than doth rokette;
A woman well more fetise is
In rokette than in cote, ywis.
The white rokette, riddeled faire,
Betokeneth that full debonaire
And swete was she that it bere.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

His casule, chimer, and rocket, were all to be rent and

ROCK, v. } Fr. Rocquer un enfant, to rock
RO'CKER. } a child. Skinner and Junius
RO'CKING, n. } think,—from the Ger. Rucken; Sw. Rucka, rugga, cedere, movere, motitare, to set in motion. (A. S. Ræcan, to reach.)

To move, to set in motion; and further, to move to and fro, backwards and forwards; and, consequently, to lull to rest.

Al so hemselve. suffren muche hunger
And wo in wint tyme. with wakyng a nyghtes
To ryse to the ruel. [reel] to rocke the cradel, &c.
Piers Plouhman, p. 151.

The cradel at hire beddes feet was sette,
To rocken, and to yeve the child to souke.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4154.

And finally to rocke vs a sleepe with all, he sayth, that he shall neuer speede well that will seeke in the Scripture whether our prelates teach vs a true fayth, though ten preach ech contrary to other in one day.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 287.

He took her in his arms, and rocking her to and fro, in faith, mistress, said he, it is high time for you to bid us good night for ever, since others can possess your place in your own time.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Midwives, rockers, nurses, with the cradle and all, were prepared and in a readines.
Fox. Actes, p. 1450. Queene Mary.

Then faire-helm'd Hector turn'd to Troy, and (as he trode the field)
The black bul's hide, that at his backe he wore about his shield,
(In the extreme circumference) was with his gate so rockt,
That (being large) it (both at once) his necke and ankles knockt.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

In like manner to procure sleepe, by lying in some pretie bed that may be rocked to and fro, is oftentimes good for a man's health.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

— At every gate
The thronging populace with hasty strides
Press furious, and, too eager of escape,
Obstruct the easy way; the rocking town
Supplants their footsteps.
Philips. Cider, b. i.

His fellow, who the narrow bed had kept,
Was weary, and without a rocker slept!
Supine he snor'd.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The trembling altar his appearance spoke;
The marble floor and glittering ceiling shook;
The doors were rock'd; the statue seem'd to nod,
And all the fabric own'd the present god.
Id. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

Every part of a tree will not do for this purpose, [rook's nest,] as some branches may not be sufficiently strong; and still others may be too much exposed to the rockings of the wind.—Goldsmith. History of the Earth, b. iv. c. 2.

ROD. Dut. Roede; Ger. Rutt, reis; Sw. Ris.
Wachter derives from rys-en, surgere, quia surgit ex arbore, et crescendo erigitur. See Risse, RUSH, and REED.

A shoot rising or springing, (from a tree.) A long, thin shoot or twig; a long stick, used as an emblem of authority; long, slender twigs, collected into a bundle; a long stick to measure with.

For ye shall see ladies stond,
Ech with a great rod in hond,
Clad in black with visage white
Ready each other for to smite.—Chaucer. Dreame.

For that shall I alwaie beseche Unto the mighty Cupido,
That he so mochel wolde do (So as he is of loue a god)
To smite hem with the same rod,
With whiche I am of loue smiten.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

I have authority geuen vnto me by Christ to punishe reccion.—Udal. 1 Cor. c. 4.

ROG

And by his very strength my line so far doth stretch,
As draws my floating cork down to the very ground,
And wresting of my rod doth make my boat turn round.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 6.

When he [Octavius] saw that the king Antiochus made no hast to give him his dispatch presently, but said he would make him an answer another day, [he] made no more adoe, but, with a wand or rod that he had in his hand, drew a circle about the king, and compelled him perforce to give him his answer before he stirred his foot without that compasse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 6.

Princes do find so great conveniency, ease, and security in their government by law, that the sence of that will keep them far better within the compass of laws than the people's holding a rod over them, which the best princes are like to suffer the most by, and bad will but grow desperate by it.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Feeling, but as monarch ought to feel,
Not for myself, but them, I'll kiss the rod,
And, having own'd the justice of my God,
Myself with firmness to the ruin give,
And die with those for whom I wish'd to live.
Churchill. Gotham, b. ii.

Had the match gone on,
And triumpht our whole nation
In his rodomont fashion.—B. Jonson. Masque of Owles.

— I was a little Mov'd in my nature, to hear his rodomontados, and Make a monster of his mistress.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act iii. sc. 1.

The duke of Epemon, in a kind of a rodomontado way, desir'd leave of the king to block up Rochel, and in six weeks he would undertake to deliver her to his hands; but I believe he reckons without his host.
Howell, b. i. s. 2. Let. 24.

If we have no reason for it, all these glorious words, generous, brave, &c. are nothing but empty flash and mere rho- domontado.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 3.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4083.

The roe's much swiftness doth no more avail,
Nor help him now, than if he were a snail.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

A harmless *roe*buck gave the rustling sounds;
Lo, from the thicket swift as thee he bounds.
Mickle. Lusiad, b. ix.

ROGA'TION. Fr. Rogation; It. Rogazione;
Sp. Rogacione; Lat. Rogatio, from rogare, to ask,
to beg. See the quotation from Hooker.

I wishe, M. Bilney, that you would but once search and set out the first origine of these rogation daies.
Fox. Actes, p. 914. Henry VIII.

As things inuented to one purpose are by vse easily con-uerted to more, it grew that supplications with this solemnitie for the appeasing of God's wrath, and the auerting of publique euils, were of the Greeke church termed Litanies.—Rogations of the Latine.

A. S. verb Wreg-an, to wrine, to wrie, to cover, to cloak; and the meaning, covered, cloaked, to be the most aptly applied to the character designated by the term.

One who has—covered, cloaked, concealed, secret designs or purposes; insidious, treacherous designs; a dishonest person; very early applied to vagrants or vagabonds, beggars or mendicants, from their common dishonesty; also applied to a playful knave, an arch fellow; to one who practises insinuating or ingratiating artifices.

For if hee be but once so taken idely roguing, hee may punish him more lightly, as with stockes, or such like.

Spenser. State of Ireland.

And to these may be added another sort of like loose fellows, which doe passe up and downe amongst gentlemen by the name of jesters, but are (indeed) notable rogues, and partakers not onely of many stealthes, by setting forth other men's goods to be stolne, but also privy to many traitorous practices and common carriers of newes, with desire whereof you would wonder how much the Irish are fed.—Id. Ib.

Wherefore, to compass his intent, he [Marius] fell in friendship with Glaucia and one Staturninus, two of the most bold, most desperate, and most harebrained young men that were in all Rome, who had all the rabblement of rogues and beggars, and such tumultuous people, at their commandment.

North. Plutarch, p. 361.

To live in one land is captivity,
To run all countries a wild roguery.—Donne, Elegy 3.

Tho. This was thy roguing,
For thou wert ever whispering; fye upon thee.
Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act iii. sc. 1.

But and the outsides offend your rogueships, look o' the lining, 'tis silk.—Dekkar. The Honest Whore, Act i. sc. 1.

Ju. Never was a man so miserably undone,
I would lose a limb to see their rogueships totter.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Night Walker, Act iii.

Though the persons by whom it is used be of better note then the former roguish sort, which you reckoned, yet the fault (me thinkes) is no lesse worthy of a marshall.

Spenser. State of Ireland.

— O my dull pate here!
If I had open'd this when it was given me,
This roguy box.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 1.

Mem. I say, who art thou?
Eumen. Why, 'tis the princess, sir.
Mem. The devil, sir,
'Tis some roguey thing.—Id. The Mad Lover, Act iv. sc. 1.

— I tell thee there is nothing
(It may be thy case, Tranio, therefore hear me)
Under the sun (reckon the mass of follies Crept into th' world with man) so desperate,
So mad, so senseless, poor and base, so wretched,
Roguy, and scurvy.—Id. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 1.

His heir roguishly wasteth all.
Grainger. On Eccles. p. 303.

Besides all these, there were a sort of wights,
I think my author calls them Teckelites,
Such hearty rogues against the king and laws,
That favour'd ev'n a foreign rebel's cause.
Dryden. Epilogue to Constantine the Great.

A flam more senseless than the roguery
Of old aurspicy and augury,
That out of garbages of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

Cur'd of her splenetic and sullen fits,
To such a peer my willing soul submits,
And to such virtue is more proud to yield,
Than 'gainst ten titled rogues to keep the field.
Churchill. The Candidate.

From aromatic shrubs the roguish gale
Steals young perfumes, and wafts them through the vale.
Id. The Prophecy of Famine.

ROIL. Chaucer writes the verb, to roll, reile, and, according to Junius, roile; and the application of the noun by Udal and Gascoigne seems to be, to—lazy, unwieldy, rolling corpulence,—or it may be a corruption of rigol.

Holinshed mentions the Flemish roile, as an outlandish horse, daily brought over.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 1.

But sure that horse which tyreth like a roile,
And lothes the griefe of his forgalded sides,
Is better much than is the hairbrainde colte
Which headlong runnes and for no bridle bydes,
But hundes for sinne in euery hit and holte.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of Phylomene.

Nulla in tam magno est corpore mica salis, There is not one crumme or droppe of good facion in all that great royle's bodye.—Udal. Flores for Latine Speaking, fol. 69.

ROIST, v. } Fr. Rustre; a ruffin, royster, ROIST'ER, n. } hackster, swaggerer; saucy, ROIST'ER, v. } poultry, scurvy fellow, (Cot-ROIST'ING, n. } grave.) The Fr. Rustaud, which may be the same word, is explained by Cotgrave to be a clown, a boor, a rude, unmannerly clown; and is derived by Vergy (see Menage) from the Lat. Rusticus. Roist seems more probably to descend from hreos-an, rasan, to rush, ruere, irruere, impetum facere; and to be applied, generally, to unruly violence.

To act with unruly violence, riotously, blusteringly; turbulently, licentiously.

There was not to be seene in his house any courtlie roysting or idlenesse; no pompe at all, no dishonest word, no swearing could there be heard.—Fox. Actes, p. 1368.

These roysters tooke from him all that they could finde, leauing nothing behinde them, insomuch as they tooke awaie the very hose from his legs, for all that he could doe.

Id. Ib. p. 805. Hen. VIII.

I haue a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes
Will strike amazement to their drowsie spirits.

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 2.

Then royster doyster in his oylie tearmes,
Cutts, thrusts, and foines at whomsoever he meets.
Returne from Pernassus, Act i. sc. 2.

But all his [Edmond Campian] searching in London availing not, he did at length, upon some intimation received, go into Berks, where with his attendants making great enquiries, did with much ado find him out (disguised like a royster, as 'tis said) in the house of Edw. Yates, Esq. at Lyford.—Wood. Athene Oxon. vol. i.

His [Churchyards] heels being equally restless with his head, he went to the royal court, laid aside his books, and for a time, so long as his money lasted, became a royster.

the old romances were remarkable for the extravagance of their fictions, romance became applied to—

Any wild, extravagant story, or invention of the imagination.

More. The Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 11.

But whosoever had the least sagacity in him could not but perceive that this theology of Epicurus was but romantical.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, b. i. c. 2.

I cannot but look on an indifferency of mind, as to the good or evil things of this life, as a meer romantick fancy of such who would be thought to be much wiser than they ever were, or could be.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The Latin tongue, as is observed by an ingenious writer, ceased to be spoken in France about the ninth century, and was succeeded by what was called the romance tongue, a mixture of the language of the Franks and bad Latin. As the songs of chivalry became the most popular compositions in that language, they were emphatically called romans or romants, though this name was at first given to any piece of poetry.—Percy. Reliques, vol. iii. p. xxi.

If what is called a metrical romance, in its most extensive acceptation, be properly defined a fabulous narrative or fictitious recital in verse, more or less marvellous or probable, it may be fairly concluded that this species of composition was known at a very early period to the Greeks, and, in process of time, adopted from them by the Romans.

Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

Bulls or letters of election only serve in the Romish Church.—Ayliffe.

For as the Romists hold fast the distinction of mortal and venial sins, so the Pharisees, with the same result, distinguish'd of the divine precepts and commandments, that some were great, that is, necessary to be observed, and some small, that is, such as did not bind the conscience with so strict an obligation, but that the violation of them might, with a very fair comportment with the divine justice, be dispensed with.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

Rude. Rode is the common A. S. for crux in the
A. S. version of the New Testament; in Goth.
Galga, whence our gallows. Junius derives from Old Isl. Roda, an image; and which Dr. Jamieson seems to favour. But the origin may lie more nearly at hand; rode is not only a cross, but a certain measurement of land made by a rod, and the cross may have been rudely formed in the imagination of the early A. S. converts of transverse rods. The ornaments of pictures of our Saviour, the Virgin, and Saints, may have been additions of after times.

Thoru here luther mode,
Heo brogte oure Lord Jhesu Christ to dye on the rode.
R. Gloucester, p. 61.

And gut quath Reson by the rode. ich shall no reuthe

Piers Plouhman, p. 71.

He died whan I came fro Jerusalem,
And lith ygrave under the rode-beem.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue.

This lorde hir asketh euermo
Howe she beleueth, and she seith,
I leue and trust in Christes feith,
Whiche died vpon the roode tre.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

By tempeste of thüder and lyghtenyng, a parte of the steeple of the church was throwen downe, and ye crucifix with the image of our lady, also stondyng vpon the roode lofte, was lykewyse ouerthrowen and brokyn, and shatered.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 223.

And nigh thereto a little chappel stooode,
Which being all with yvy overspred
Deckt all the roode, and, shadowing the roode, Seem'd like a grove faire branched over hed.

tectum, (Tooke, vol. ii. p. 350.) The uses of a roof would lead us to suppose that the word meant a covering, a protection; but according to Tooke's etymology it is—

That which is sustained or supported, (sc.)
by the sides of the building; and thence applied to the covering, that which covers, overspreads, is super-imposed; and further, to the whole house or habitation.

For whi tho thingis that ye han seide in derknessis, schulen be seid in light, and that that ye han spokun in eere in couchis, schal be prechid in roouys.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 12.

He goth and geteth him a kneding trough,
And after a tubbe, and a kemelin,
And prively he sent hem to his in,
And heng hem in the roof in privetee.

High roof and walks beneath, and alleys brown
That open'd in the midst a woody scene.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Heaven's arch is oft their roof, the pleasant shed
Of oak and plain oft serves them for a bed.
Drummond. The Speech of Caledonia.

How reverend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose ancient pillars rear their marble heads,
To bear aloft its arch'd and ponderous roof,
By its own weight made stedfast and immoveable,
Looking tranquillity!—Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act ii.

Their walls, o'ergrown with moss, display;
And columns, awful in decay,
Rear up their roofless heads to form the various scene.

sition of this bird to theft, Skinner would derive our verb to rook, i. e. to cheat, to steal. The reverse is more probably the fact. The name of the bird is usually, however, derived from its hoarse voice (rauc-us.)

The crows and rookes have a cast by themselves; for when they meet with a hard nut which they are not able to cracke nor breake their shales with their bills, they will flie aloft and fling it against some rock or tyle-house.

Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 12.

If such divine ministeries as these, wherein the angel of the church represents the person of Christ Jesus, must lie prostitute to sordid fees, and not pass to and fro between our Saviour that of free grace redeem'd us, and the submissive penitent, without the truccage of perishing coin, and the butcherly execution of tormentors, rooks, and rake-shames sold to lucre, then have the Babylonish merchants of souls just excuse.

Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

Where in venerable rows Widely waving oaks enclose
The moat of yonder antique hall,
Swarm the rooks with clamorous call;
And, to the toils of nature true,
Wreath their capacious nests anew.—Warton. Ode 10.

At the commencement of spring, the rookery (in the Temple) which, during the continuance of winter, seemed to have been deserted, or only guarded by about five or six, like old soldiers in a garrison, now begins to be once more frequented; and in a short time all the bustle and hurry of business is fairly commenced.

Roomful house, (in Donne),—a house full of room, abounding in room; in common speech, a roomful is a room,—full of, or filled with, people, furniture, &c.

But never was that dent of thunder,
That so swithe gan downward discend

And yield his rowme to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle gan to shade
The face of earth and wayes of living wight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

King Candaulus bought of Butarchus a painted table, wherein was drawne the defeature and destruction of the Magnetes, which tooke up no greate roume, and weighed out the poise thereof in good gold.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 38.

We find man, of all sensible creatures, to have the fullest brain to his proportion, and that it was so provided by the Supreme Being for the lodging of the intellectuall faculties; it must needs be a silent character of hope, when, in the æconomical providence of nature, (as I may term it,) there is good store of roomage and receipt where those powers are stowed.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 81.

Now in a roomful house this soul doth float,

Drayton. Noah's Flood.

The husbandman, surveying of his ground,
'Mongst all the trees this oak had quickly found;
And, by all signs and likelihood of trade,
The birds therein their nightly roosting made.
Id. The Owl.

More certain was the crowing of the cock
To number hours, than is an abbey clock,
And sooner than the matin bell was rung,
He clapp'd his wings upon his roost, and sung.

part of the prow.

A rostral or rostrate coronet,—a coronet given for a naval exploit or victory.

Now for as much as we are light upon the mention of navall or rostrate coronets, this would be noted, That in old time the said brasen beake-heads of ships woon from the enemies, and set upon the front of the tribunall or publicke pulpit in Rome, served for an ornament to beautifie the forum or common place of the citie.
Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 4.

The first, Plenty, leaned her right arm upon a plough, and under her left held a huge horn, out of which she poured a gression round; successive change in such progression.

Touching the wheelright you write of, who from a cart came to be a captain, it made me think of the perpetual rotations of fortune, which you know antiquity seated upon a wheel in a restless though not violent volubility.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 11.

Equal rotation is equal vicissitude in government, or succession to magistracy confer'd for such convenient terms, enjoying equal vacations, as take in the whole body by parts, succeeding others, thro the free election or suffrage of the people.—Harrington. Oceana, p. 54.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids, quâ fluids, seemeth to be globular; there being no other figure so well fitted either to the making of fluidity, or of that visible rotundity to which the drops of water and other liquors do constantly conform.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 2. s. 18.

After having survey'd this dome, I went to see the rotunda, (at Rome,) which is generally said to have been the model of it.—Addison. Remarks on Italy.

I have often consider'd with myself whether the ordinary figure of the heathen, or that of the Christian temples, be the most beautiful, and the most capable of magnificence, and can't forbear thinking the cross figure more proper for such spacious buildings than the rotund.—Id. Ib.

In the next place, the figure of the shield being round, it is an emblem of perfection, for Aristotle has said the round figure is the most perfect. It may likewise signify the immortal reputation that the emperor has acquired by his great actions, rotundity being an emblem of eternity that has neither beginning nor end.—Id. Ancient Medals.

The effects, therefore, of a capital employed in such a roundabout foreign trade of consumption are in every respect the same as those of one employed in the most direct trade of the same kind, except that the final returns are likely to be still more distant, as they must depend upon the returns of two or three distinct foreign trades.

ROUSE. See CAROUSE. From the Ger.
Rausch, semiebrietas as Skinner, or crapula, as Wachter interprets,—a dizziness of the head.
The Ger. verb Rauschen, Dut. Ruyschen, is stridere, crepare, strepitum edere; in A. S. Hris-cian, to make a rustling noise. The word is perhaps formed upon the verb to rouse, to arouse, to raise, to excite, to animate. See the quotation from Beaumont.

This is the wine,
Which, in former time,
Each wise one of the magi
Was wont to arouse
In a frolick bouse,
Recubans sub tegmine fagi.

ROUT, v. A. S. Hrut-an; Dut. Rotelen, to snort, snore, or rout in sleeping. To rowt or rawt is to low like an ox or cow, (Ray, who refers to the A. S. Hrut-an.) Hence also the A. S. Hruther, bos, a rother-beast.

Riche men routen tho, and in here reste were

ROW. } Rupta and rota. (See Vossius, De Vitiis, lib. ii. c. 16; Menage, Wachter, Spelman, and Junius: and see RIOT.) If from rupta, the meaning will be—

An irruption, a bursting or rushing in; then applied to—

Those who make an irruption, an inroad, an invasion; to the concourse or assembly; to the road, way, path, course, the invaders take; to the consequences of such inroad or invasion; the tumult, devastation, defeat, discomfiture, overthrow, (of the invaded.) If from rota,—

A globe or compact body of men; persons assembled, collected, united together; an assembly or concourse; their acts and deeds; the course they take or pursue. See RIOT.

A row (see the quotations from Gower and Byron) seems merely a corrupt pronunciation of rout.

Ro'WING, n. } the Ger. Reg-en, to move. The Ro'WABLE. } Dut. Roer, roeder, is derived by Kilian from Dut. Roeren, to move, the ship being guided or steered by the motion of the rudder.
See RUDDER.

The Dut. Roeren is the Goth. Reiran; A. S.
Hreran; Ger. Ruren, to move, to rear, to raise. To "rowen out of synne," in Piers Plouhman, seems to be,—to raise or rouse, move or stir, out of sin.

ROW

To row is—

To move or steer, that is, stir, (sc.) a boat, ship, &c., to move or pass along, as if driven or impelled (as usually implied) by oars.

Rowing, (Wiclif),—that which is rows or is rowed; the boat.

Ac free wil & free wit. folweth a man evere
To repenten and ryse. and rowen out of synne
To contrition to confession. til he come to hus ende.
Piers Plouhman, p. 168.

2 Lord. My lord, the roynish clown, at whom so oft
Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 2.

Aroynt thee, witch, the rumpe-fed ronyon cries.
Id. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 3.

ROYTISH. Ray says, rowty is over-rank and strong; spoken of corn or grass land.

Mr. Moore (Suffolk Words), "Rout is—coarse grass, which looks brown and sere in the spring."

No weed presum'd to shew its roytish face
In this inclosure; nettles, thistles, brakes,
Thorns, briars, cockle, hemlock, rampant grasse,
With all those herbs the meager wizard rakes
Into his deadly boxes, either yet
Were not at all, or far from Eden set.
Beaumont. Psyche, p. 85.

RUB, v. } Ger. Reib-en; Dut. Wriiven, RUB, n. } terere, conterere, fricare;
RU'BBER. } To move one thing in close

RU'BBING, n. } contact or with pressure against another; to press hard upon or against, (while in motion;) consequentially, to cause a stoppage, hinderance, or obstruction; a difficulty, a struggle;
to hinder or obstruct; also, to cleanse, to polish.

Rubber is also, consequentially, applied to a struggle or contest, (sc.) at some game or play.

It shall be expedient, after that the bodye is clesed, to rubbe the bodye with a course linnen cloth, first softly and easily, and after to increase more and more to a harde and swift rubbing.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32.

Some, with holding in the nocke of their shafte harde, rubbe the skinne of their fingers.—Ascham. Toxophilus, b. ii.

Ah! sir, said Paridel, do not dismay
Yourselfe for this; myselfe will for you fight,
As ye have done for me; the left hand rubs the right.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

— Give me a true friend,
That, where occasion is to do a benefit,
Aims at the end, and not the rubs before it.
Beaumont. & Fletcher. Woman Pleas'd, Act ii. sc. 1.

RUB

Sir John after this could have stood down the sun,
Dividing the pulpit and text with one fist,
The glass was compell'd still rubbers to run,
And he counted the fift evangelist.
Cartwright. The Chambermaid's Posset.

So here's t' you, [Charles,] a rubber's to 't; Here's a cast more; if that won't do 't Here's half a dozen more.—Brome. Epistle to C. S.

Jol. When, at a Tuesday meeting, the country comes in Much rubbing taketh down the bodie and causeth leannesse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

This last allusion gall'd the panther more,
Because indeed it rubb'd upon the sore.
Yet seem'd she not to winch, though shrewdly pain'd;
But thus her passive character maintain'd.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The servants wash the platter, scour the plate,
Then blow the fire with puffing cheeks, and lay
The rubbers, and the bathing sheets display.
Id. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

And those are wonderfully busy and active to throw rubs and stumbling-blocks in our way.—Sharp, vol. vi. Ser. 14.

He [Elmer] used for recreation to bowl in a garden, and Martin Marprelate thence took this taunting scoff, that the bishop would cry Rub, rub, rub, to his bowl, and, when 'twas gone too far, say, the devil go with it, and then, quoth he,
the bishop would follow.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

Behold him taken up, rubb'd down,
In elbow-chair and morning-gown;
Behold him in his latter bloom,
Stripp'd, wash'd, and sprinkled with perfume.
Churchill. Ghost, b. iv.

this rubbish, though I do not produce them in sport.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 12.

Buried in rubbidge and dust.—Bp. Hall. Rem. p. 56.

Thou sifted'st long-hid dust to find lost ore,
And searchedst rubbish to encrease our store.
Cartwright. To the Memory of Sir Henry Spelman.

Others might be named, who from finding fault with the Council of Nice for corrupting Christianity, (as they fondly supposed,) have gradually, and in a course of years, come to reject Christianity itself as needless and useless, and all revealed religion as mere rubbish.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 102.

Embruted every faculty divine;
Heart-bury'd in the rubbish of the world.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

They consisted only of Kentish rubble-stone, artfully

I have kept of precious cure,
Thrice upon the finger's tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied lip.—Id. Comus, v. 911.

The coronarium or laton, after that to everie ounce of it there be put six scrupals of gold, and be reduced into a verie thin foile, resemblenth the colour of fire, like a rubie or carbuncle stone.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 8.

— And when she spake,

Sweete wordes, like dropping honny, she did shed;
And twixt the perles and rubins softly brake
A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

There be againe, who having prepared and rubified the skin with salnitre, do anoint the place where the haire is gone or groweth thin.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 6.

I have been here time enough in conscience to pass all the degrees and effects of fire, as distillation, sublimation, mortification, calcination, solution, descension, dealbation, rubification, and fixation.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 42.

Du. Deere lad, beleuee it;

For they shall yet belye thy happy yeeres,
That say thou art a man; Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and rubious.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 4.

I say then, That while the several species of rays, as the rubifick, cerulifick, and others, are by refraction separated one from another; they retein those motions, which are proper to each of them.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

Oh race to death devote! with Stygian shade
Each destin'd peer impending fates invade.
With tears your wan, distorted cheeks are drown'd,
With sanguine drops the walls are rubied round.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

His ample forehead bore a coronet
With sparkling diamonds and with rubies set.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

Of those rays which pass close by the snow, the rubiform will be the least refracted, and so come to the eye in the directest lines.—Newton. Optics.

You'll marre it, if you kisse it; stayne your owne
With oyle painting.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 3.

Of all other sorts of red earth, the ruddle of Ægypt and Affricke is fittest for carpenters; for if they strike their line upon timber with it, that shall bee sure that it will take colour and be marked verie well.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 6.

The colour of sandaracha ought to be fierie like a flame;
a pound thereof is bought for five asses, i. halfe a denier.
Calcine this and ruddle together, and of both, being concorporat in equall quantitie, you shall have the colour called sandyx.—Id. Ib.

His nose was aquiline, his eyes were blue,
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Not so the diamond shifts its trembling beam;
Not so the ruby flames with ruddy gleam.

Hooile. Orlando Furioso, b. x.

O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.
It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It ruddied all the copse-wood glen.

RU'DDER, or } A. S. Rother; Ger. Roeder; RO'THER. } Dut. Roer, roeder; Sw. Roder; Somner calls rother—an oare, the blade or broader part of an oare. It seems to have been applied generally to—

That which rows, moves, steers, guides, or directs the course of (sc. a ship, a boat, any thing.)

Edward do turne the rother, & fare ouer the se.

R. Brunne, p. 289.

The queene her selfe accustomed aye
In the same barge to play,
It needeth neither mast ne rother.—Chaucer. Dreame.

The ship of loue hath lost his rother.

Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

At the first shotte he split our rudder's head in pieces, and the second shotte he strake vs under the water, and the third shotte he shotte vs through our foremast with a co-luering shot, and thus he hauing rent both our rudder and maste, and shot vs vnder water, we were inforced to goe in again.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 186.

Yet are they turned about with a very litell stearne whither soeuer the shippe maister's mynde, that gouerneth the rother, will set it.—Udal. James, c. 4.

And so thei tooke up the ankers, and committed themselves to the sea, and leused withall the joyntes of the sterne and the rudder.—Id. Actes, c. 17.

O thou fayre sonne of gentle faery,
Thou art in mightie armes most magnifyde
Above all knights that ever batteill tryde,
O turne thy rudder hetherward awhile.

asserts that rude is not, as it might at first sight seem to be, from the Lat. Rudis, but from the
A. S. Rethe, sævus, ferox, impolitus, wrath, fierie, barbarous, or unpolished. Rud-is and rude had probably the same origin; ruth-ed, ruthd, rud;
rud-is, rude. Rude, then, or wrath, (qv,) is writhed, tortured, (sc.) with anger; and rude seems to be equivalent to—

Rugged or rough, ill or unformed, ill or un-fashioned; coarse, uncivilized, untaught, unpolished.

He knew not Caton, for his wit was rude,
That bade a man shulde wedde his similitude.

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3163.

O leud book with thy foule rudenesse,
Sith thou haste neither beauty ne eloquence,
Who hath thee caused or yeue the hardnesse
For to appeare in my ladies presence.

Id. Of the Cuckow and the Nightingale.

And she was of too litell might,
Defence ageyne so rude a knight
To make.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The matrones and the virgins followe after syngyng a rude song after their cuntrye maner, wherby they beleue to obteyne of Jupiter to shewe his oracle manifest and true.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 72.

They were all apparelled alike, and that very rudely and homely.—Sir T. More. Utopia, b. ii. c. 6.

And go thou into Frese and conquere our herytage, that these Fresones by pride and rudenes do witholde fro vs.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 206.

Her scattred brood, soone as their parent deare
They saw so rudely falling to the ground,
Groning full deadly all with troublous feare,
Gathred themselves about her body round.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

And now this wish'd-for, but yet dreadful prey,
To Achis' court they led in haste away,
With all unmanly rudeness which does wait
Upon th' immoderate vulgar's joy and hate.

Cowley. Davideis, b. iii.

— I must forsooth be forst
To giue my hand oppos'd against my heart
Vnto a mad-braine rudesby, full of spleene,
Who wo'd in haste, and meanes to wed at leysure.

Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 2.

— Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountaines and the barbarous caues,
Where manners nere were preach'd: out of my sight.
Be not offended, deere Cesario:
Rudesbey, be gone.—Id. Twelfth Night, Act iv. sc. 1.

Imperfect shapes, in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

It is much to be suspected that many pretend a zeal for scripture who mean nothing by it but to have its fences taken down, that they may deal the more freely or rudely with it.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. c. 7.

My censures of some reputed virtuos, that live in it, are written with as harmless and friendly designs as was the seeming rudeness of the angel to St. Peter, when he struck him on the side and hastily roused him.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 509.

How oft in raptures, which man scarce could bear,
Have I, when gone, still thought the Muses there;
Still heard their music, and, as mute as death,
Sat all attention, drew in ev'ry breath,
Lest, breathing all too rudely, I should wound
And mar that magic excellence of sound.

Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

He chooses company, but not the squire's,
Whose wit is rudeness, whose good breeding tires.

riching a longer taking.
Sir T. Smith. Speech Fourth. On the Queen's Marrying.

Why should I more molest the world with cries,
The air with sighs, the earth below with tears?
Sith I live hateful to those ruthless eyes,
Vexing with untun'd moan her dainty ears.

Daniel. Son. 21. To Delia.

Rebellion, worse than witchcraft, they pursued:
The pulpit preach'd the crime, the people rue'd.
Dryden. Ep. 12.

Alarm'd, the' inferior demons of the place
Rais'd rueful shrieks and hideous yells around.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

With boild, bak'd, roast, all justling in the street;
Dejecting all, and ruefully dismay'd.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Divine Achilles! wilt thou then retire,
And leave our hosts in blood, our fleets on fire?
If wrath so dreadful fill thy ruthless mind,
How shall thy friend, thy Phoenix, stay behind?

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

But the vex'd droll, by force, was fated
To be conducted where he hated.
The careful carrier held her prize
In spite of all his rueful cries.—Cooper. Ver-Vert, c. 3.

When, exercise and air my only aim,
And heedless whither, to that field I came,
Ere yet with ruthless joy the happy hound
Told hill and dale that reynard's track was found.

Cowper. The Needless Alarm.

Hall,—a rising, an insurrection, a tumult; and,
hence, a ruff or ruffle is—

Tumult, confusion, disorder, disturbance. And ruffler—

A disorderly person, a disturber of peace or good order.

To ruff or ruffle,—to raise, to throw up; to raise a contest or disturbance, to contest.

Ruff or ruffle,—articles of dress, so called because raised or puffed out or up, or some parts raised or laid over others, (sc.) in plaits, folds, wrinkles.

Ruff and ruffle are, however, evidently used by some writers as if akin to rough.

In the fourth booke sufficiently hath beene described the excessiue pride and pompe of Antichrist, flourishing in his ruffe and securitie, from the time of William Conquerour hitherto.—Fox. Actes, p. 364. Edw. III.

But Thomyris deuised with her selfe howe she might be reuenged, and with like pollicie and deceypte begyled her enemies nowe being in their chiefe ruffe for theyr new gotten victorie.—Goldinge. Justine, fol. 6.

And some be weeded from the finer stuffe,
Some stande by proppes to maynteyne all their ruffe.
Gascoigne. Gardnings.

The lorde mayer had iiii. footemen all in whyte sylke, cutte, ruffed, and pounced.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 21.

And thereto they have so ruffled and tangled the temporall and spiritual regiment together, and made thereof such confusion that no man can know the one from the other.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 185.

This capitayne moche steyed the citie, notwithstanding that xx. or more persones were sleyn in the ruffe.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

Where as he, scant bearing the habit of a clerke, and going in his changes and soft apparell, is more conuersant among the delicat rufflers in the court.—Fox. Actes, p. 203.

Ye see the entrynges of our philosophie, whereby it was thought good vnto God to saue all mankynde. Ye see the pompe and ruffling of the euangelicall schole.
Udal. Matthew, c. 4.

Wherupon Anselmus iudgyng the king a scismaticke, a rebel, and a tyrat obstinately withstode him to the very face like a rufflinge rouer.—Bale. English Votaries, fol. 65.

Whiles the proud bird, ruffling his fethers wyde
And brushing his faire brest, did her invade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

Thenceforth the fether in her lofty crest,
Ruffed of love, gan lowly to auaile;
And her proud portance and her princely gest,
With which she earst triumphed, now did quaille.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

His ruffin raiment all was stain'd with blood
Which he had spilt, and all to rags yrent.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4.

Some pranke their ruffles; and others trimly dight
Their gay attyre. Id. Ib.

His gravity is much lessen'd since the late proclamation came out against ruffs, and the king himself shew'd the first example; they were come to that height of excess herein that twenty shillings were us'd to be paid for starching of a ruff.—Howell, b. i. s. 3. Let. 32.

So they being in this ruff and jollity, news came suddenly that Aratus was come.—North. Plutarch, p. 849.

The wyld woodgods, arrived in the place,
There find the virgin, doolful, desolate,
With ruffled rayments and fayre blubbed face,
As her outrageous foe had left her late.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

A reverend man, that graz'd his cattle nigh, (Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of citie, and had let go by The swiftest hours) observed as they flew.

Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Your harpes sweet touch, curl'd lockes, fine shape, and gifts so exquisite, Given thee by Venus, would have done your fine dames little good,

When blood and dust had ruffled them, and had as little stood
Thy selfe in stead.—Chapman Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

Aso. Lady, I cannot ruffle it in red and yellow.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act iii. sc. 3.

— The tailor staies thy leasure,
To decke thy bodie with his ruffling treasure.
Shakespeare. The Taming of the Shrew, Act iv. sc. 3.

Farewel my eagle; when thou flew'st, whole armies
Have stoopt below thee: at Passage I have seen thee
Ruffle the Tartars, as they fled thy furie.

Beaumont & Fletcher. The Loyal Subject, Act i. sc. 3.

And both the parliament and people complain'd, and demanded justice for those assaults, if not murders, done at his own doors by that crew of rufflers.

Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilike.

While it is thus, it cannot be diseased in that spiritual state wherein it will be wholly separated from all bodily sense and passion; because it has no affection in it that can any way disturb or ruffle its calm and gentle thoughts.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

So roll the billows to th' Icarian shore,
From east and south when winds begin to roar,
Burst their dark mansions in the clouds, and sweep
The whitening surface of the ruffled deep.

Pope. Homer's Iliad, b. ii.

Her pinions ruffle, and, low dropping, scarce
Can bear the mourner to the poplar shade;
Where, all abandon'd to despair, she sings
Her sorrows through the night.

Thomson. Spring.

He shows, on holidays, a sacred pin
That touch'd the ruff that touch'd Queen Bess's chin.

Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 4.

Indebted to some smart wig-weaver's hand

Who take the ruffian billowes by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deaft'ning clamors on the slipp'ry clouds.

Id. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

Let our ruffianly love-locke wearers marke it.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. ii. Act ii. sc. 2.

— Yet might it serue beside
To shelter the said monument from all the ruffinous pride
Of stormes and tempests, use to hurt things of that noble kinde.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Where Casium high o'erlooks the shoaly strand,
A bark with armed ruffians straight is mann'd,
And the task trusted to Achillas' hand.

Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

His blood a traitor's sacrifice was made,
And smok'd indignant on a ruffian's blade.

Young. Last Day, b. ii.

Each village inn has heard the ruffian boast,
That he believ'd in neither God nor ghost;
That when the sod upon the sinner press'd,
He, like the saint, had everlasting rest.

Crabbe. Parish Register.

RUG. } A.S. Rooc; Ger. Dut. and Sw.
RUGINE. } Rock, indumentum; believed, (says Wachter,) to be from the Gr. Pakos, lacera vestis.
Skinner thinks it may be from rough, q.d. a rough garment. Tooke considers it to be the same word as rock, (qv.), the past part. of wrig-an, to cover, by the usual change of the characteristic i into oo or u.

A cover or clothing: it is usually applied to a coarse, thick covering or coverlet for beds, horses, &c. Rugine, the dim. of rug.

Rug,—a kind of dog, may be, as Skinner thinks, a rough.

The townes built of stone, the people rude in conditions, parralled in diuers coloured rugs.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 87.

I wish'd 'em then get him to bed; they did so,
And almost smother'd him with rugs and pillows.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Little Thief, Act v. sc. 1.

Horror assumes her seat, from whose abiding flies
Thick vapours, that like rugs still hang the troubled air.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

Macb. I, in the catalogue ye goe for men,
As hounds, and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, cures,
Showghes, water-rugs, and demy-wolues are clept
All by the name of dogges.

Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 1.

Look, this is the knight, in the rug-gown.

Eastward Hoe, Act v. sc. 1.

The friendly rug preserv'd the ground,
And headlong knight, from bruise or wound.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

The lips [of the ulcer] grew turgid with the anguish, and so painful that she could not endure the wiping the thin ichor from it with a soft rugin with her own hand.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 4.

RUGGEDNESS. } unpolished, harsh, severe, rude, uncivil, boisterous.

Tho came this woful Theban Palamon
With florty berd, and ruggy ashy heres,
In clothes blake, ydropped all with teres,
And (passing over of weping Emellie)
The reufullest of all the compaignie.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2814.

For experiēce teacheth, that of a rugged colt commeth a good horse.—Hall. Hen. IV. Intro. p. 9.

Maud, ruggy, thither skipped
She was vglye hipped
And vglye lipped.

Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

The rugged forehead, that with grave foresight
Welds kingdoms, causes, and affaires of state,
My looser rimes, I wote, doth sharply write
For praysing love as I have done of late.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 1.

Arri. Come, ye must resolve, say yea or no.
Orrian. Then no; nay, look not ruggedly upon me,
I am made up too strong to fear such looks.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman-Hater, Act v. sc. 3.

And as for the ruggednesse of any blade, it [the bloud of a bucke goat] will take it away more effectually, and polliish it better than the very file.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 9.

But, as an elf (the devil's valet)
Is not so slight a thing to get;
For those that do his business best,
In hell are us'd the ruggedest.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

For I am apt to suspect that if we were sharp-sighted enough, or had such perfect microscopes, as I fear are more to be wished than hoped for, our promoted sense might discern in the physical surfaces of bodies both a great many latent ruggednesses, and the particular sizes, shapes, and situations of the extremely little bodies that cause them.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 680.

This respect, therefore, we owe to humane nature, which is common to all men, to file off that unmanly sharpness and ruggedness of humour which renders us perverse and untractable in our conversation.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 2.

Then to my ear transmit some gentle song,
Of those whose lives are yet sincere and plain,
Their bounded walks the rugged cliffs along,
And all their prospect but the wintery main.

Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands of Scotland.

To destroy, or cause or bring to destruction;
to overthrow, to fall or cause to fall, to overturn,
to demolish, to subvert, to lay waste; to pull,
tear, break, to pieces; to bring to waste or want.

For in this world there is no creature,
As to my dome, that ever saw ruine
Straunger than this, through case or adventure.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

At Rome first if we begin,
The wall and all the citie within Stante in ruine and in decaies
The felde is where was the palais.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

The buildings within it are also of earth, but ruined and out of good order.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 329.

True it is that this part vnderneath remaineth at this day inhabitable, because of the corrupt aire, as also for that by time, which consumeth all things, it is greatly ruined.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 199.

Aurely, whiche, as before ye haue harde, helde and occupied the myddell part of Brytayne, with Cambria or Wallis, dyd his dilygence to repayre ruynous places, as well temples and other.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 95.

The power of this empyre is ruinously deminished.

Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Therefore, Sir Terpin, from you lightly throw
This squalid weede, the patterne of dispaire,
And wend with me, that ye may see and know
How fortune will your ruin'd name repaire.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

Ye heavenly spirites, whose ashie cinders lie
Under deep ruines, with huge walls opprest,
But not your praise, the which shall never die
Through your faire verses, ne in ashes rest.

Id. The Ruines of Rome.

— But Priam's amorous birth,
Against Tydides bent his bow, hid with a hill of earth,
Part of the ruined tombe for honor'd Ilus built.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Of these Roman coynes great plenty haue beene found, and daily are found, which were hid, as the Saxon Chronicle saith, when Maximus carried so many Brittaines into France with him, and at diuers other times ouercouered in the ground in the sodaine ruinating [in some Editions ruination] of tounes by the Saxons and others.

Camden. Remaines. Money.

— She gript his hand, and said,
Mars, Mars, thou ruiner of men, that in the dust hast laid
So many citie, and with bloud thy godhead dost disteine.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

And all the hinder partes, that few could spie,
Were ruinous and old, but painted cunningly.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

So Helen wept, when her too faithful glass Reflected to her eyes the ruins of her face.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

The diadem, with mighty projects lin'd
To catch renown by ruining mankind,
Is worth, with all its gold and glitt'ring store,
Just what the toy will sell for, and no more.

Cowper. Table Talk.

But I will rally and combat the ruiner;
Not a look, not a smile, shall my passion discover.

Goldsmith. Song.

Though a particular merchant, with abundance of goods in his warehouse, may sometimes be ruined by not being able to sell them in time, a nation or country is not liable to the same accident.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 1.

Of all these expensive and uncertain projects, however, which bring bankruptcy upon the greater part of the people who engage in them, there is none perhaps more perfectly ruinous than the search after new silver and gold mines.

First ill, and after ruled wickedly.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

Ne thine be kingdomes, ne the scepters thine;

But realmes and rulers thou doest both confound,

And loyall truth to treason doest incline.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

For the removing the impression of your nature to be opiniastre and not rutable; first, and above all things I wish, that all matters past, which cannot be revoked, your lordship would turn altogether upon insatisfaction, and not upon your nature or proper disposition.

Bacon. To Lord Essex, Oct. 1596.

Lo! there lives also the immortall praise

O womankind, most faithfull to her mate,

Penelope; and from her far awayes

A rulesse route of yongmen, which her wood,

All slaine with darts, lie wallowed in their blood.

Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

This author looked upon it as a ruled point, a thing universally agreed to, that there neither was nor could be any demonstration a priori of the existence of God.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 407.

And some, with whom compar'd your insect-tribes

The royal malady should rest unknown,

Both for her husband's honour and her own;

But ne'ethless she pin'd with discontent;

The counsel rumbled till it found a vent.

Dryden. The Wif of Bathes Tale.

Therefore you wisely scorn your style to humble,

Or for the sense's sake to wave the rumble.

Butler. A Palinode.

RUMINATE, v.

RUMINATION.

RUMINATOR.

Fr. Ruminer; It. Ruminare; Sp. Rumiar; Lat. Ruminare, from rumen or ruma, the gullet, the passage to the stomach, from ρῦμα, the course or passage. Hence,—

To ruminate is to pass and repass the food to and from the stomach, to repass it for chewing again; and hence, further, to chew the chew'd or cud; and (met.) to revolve, to reflect, to re-examine; to weigh, to ponder, to deliberate, to muse or meditate upon.

Let hym, before that occasion of ire doth happen, accustom hym selfe to beholde, and marke well them that be angry, with the successe of that anger, and ruminate it in his mynde a good space after.

Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. i. c. 2.

For my own particular, the more I ruminate upon it, the more it astonisheth my imagination and shaketh all the cells of my brain; so that sometimes I struggle with my faith, and have much ado to believe it yet.

Howell, b. ii. Let. 24.

Now there was near unto this place a wild fig tree which they called ruminalis, of the name of Romulus, as the most part thought; or else because the beasts feeding there were wont to come under the same in the extreame heat of the day, and there did ruminate, that is, chew their cud in the shadow.—North. Plutarch, p. 17.

It is a melancholy of mine owne, compounded of many simples, extracted from many obiects, and indeed the sundrie contemplation of my trauells, in which by [my] often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 1.

She [Nature] hath employed all these methods, as fermentation in the stomachs of most terrestrial and all aquatick animals; expression and squeezing in the omasus of ruminant quadrupeds, and in the intestines of all creatures.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

RUM

The description these [writers] give of the muscular part of the gullet, Dr. Drake saith, is very exact in ruminants, but not in men.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 11. No. 40.

A various groupe the herds and flocks compose,

Rural confusion! on the grassy bank

Some ruminating lie; while others stand

Half in the flood, and, often bending, sip

The circling surface. Thomson. Summer.

Perhaps some doctor, of tremendous paunch,

Awful and deep, a black abyss of drink,

Outlives them all; and from his bury'd flock

Retiring, full of rumination sad,

Laments the weakness of these latter times.

Id. Autumn.

As when a traveller, a long day past

In painful search of what he cannot find,

At night's approach, content with the next cot,

There ruminates a while his labour lost.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

RU/MMAGE, or

ROO/MAGE, v.

RU/MMAGE, n.

RU/MMAGER.

RU/MMAGING, n.

Skinner says,—signifies to remove the goods in the hold of a ship. The quotations from Hackluyt leave no doubt as to the meaning.

To fill a room or space; to find room or space for; to pack or stow away; and, hence, to look into, search, examine, the roomage or space into which things are packed or stowed; to search, to toss or tumble about in searching. See Room.

And that the masters of the ships do looke wel to the romaging, for they might bring away a great deale more then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 308.

The master must provide a perfect mariner called a romager, to raunge and bestow all merchandize in such place as is conuenient.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 862.

Now whilst the mariners were romaging the shippes, and mending that which was amisse, the miners followed their labour for getting together of sufficient quantitie of ore, and the carpenters indeuoured to doe their best for the making vp of the boate or pinnesse.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 88.

The first thing he [the said familiar] doth, he seizeth the party's breeches, searcheth his pockets, and taketh his keys, and so rummageth all his closets and trunks.

Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 42.

— And this (I take it)

Is the maine motiue of our preparations,

The sourse of this our watch, and the cheefe head

Of this post-hast and romage in the land.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

Last winter, being urged to publish my History of Cold, (which soon after came forth,) I rummaged among my loose papers.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 4.

Our greedy seamen rummage every hold;

Smile on the booty of each wealthier chest,

And, as the priests who with their gods make bold,

Take what they like, and sacrifice the rest.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

RUMMER. From the Dut. Ruymer, ampliare, to enlarge.

A large (roomy or spacious) vessel; a large glass.

Then Rhenish rummers walk the round;

In bumpers every king is crown'd.—Dryden, Ep. 7.

Harm. Sen. He refus'd to pledge the last rummer; so I am out of charity with him.—Id. Amboyne, Act iv. sc. 1.

— With that

A German oft has swill'd his throat, and sworn,

Deluded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd

The generous rummer, whilst the owner, pleas'd,

Laughs inly at his guests, thus entertain'd

With foreign vintage from his cider cask.

Philips. Cider, b. ii.

RUMOUR, n.

RU/MOUR, v.

RU/MOURER.

RU/MOUROUS.

Fr. Rumeur; It. Rumore;

Sp. Rumor; Lat. Rumor, from ρῦμα, dictum, or rather from ρῦμα, fluxus; rumor being,

nihil aliud, quam sermo in populo emanans. It may have sprung from the A. S. Hræman; (see To RUMBLE;) a word which seems not unhappily to describe the confused, continued, or repeated sound, in or by which rumours are conveyed: rumour being applied to—

A spreading, circulating conveyance of news, indistinct circulation or report; generally, report, fame.

But ye semen certes ye can do nothing a right but if it be for the audience of the people, and for yle rumours.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

RUN

And nowe partely a certayne rumour and fame of the cumming of Christe, beeyng secretly spred abrode by many.

This rumor then into the common ears.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

The rumourouse fall of antichryst and his kyngdome.
Bale. On the Revel, pt. iii.

Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,
The numbers of the feared.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

This bearer will tell you what we hear of certain rumorouse surmises at N. and the neighbouring towns; God (who is himself the true center of rest) make us all quiet and have you in his love.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 377.

Bru. Go see this rumor whipt, it cannot be,
The Voices dare breake with vs.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. s. 6.

But ah, I dream! th' appointed hour is fled!
And hope, too long with vain delusion fed,
Deaf to the rumour of fallacious fame,
Gives to the roll of death his glorious name.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

What then befel him, little I relate,
For various tales are rumord of his fate.

For rump, in English history, see the quotation from Hume.

What may I deeme of thee (faire fawlon) now,
That neither to my lure nor traine wilt bow,
But this, that when my backe is turnde and gon,
Another gives thee rumpes to tyre upon.
Turberville. To a Fickle and Vnconstant Dame.

Thy diet shall be such,
thy tiring rumpes so bare,
As thou shalt know thy keeper well and for none other care.
Id. To his Friend.

It certainly was the most ugly of jades,
His hips and his rump made a right ace of spades.
Cotton. Voyage to Ireland, c. 3.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile,
His plunder was not worth the while;
All which the conqueror did discompt,
To pay for curing of his rump.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

Dr. Palmer, a great rumper, warden of All Soules' College, being then very ill and weak, had a rump thrown up from the street at his windows. He had been one of the rumpparliament, and a great favourite of Oliver.
Life of A. Wood, p. 140.

He, Thomas Widdowes, hath written — the several apparitions, the frights and punishments inflicted upon the rumpish commissioners sent thither to survey manors and houses belonging to his majesty, Lond. 1649.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

A Turkey carpet was his lawn,
Whereon he lov'd to bound,
To skip and gamble like a fawn
And swing his rump around.
Couper. Epitaph on a Hare.

It was agreed that, burying former enmities in oblivion, all efforts should be made for the overthrow of the rump; so they called the parliament, in allusion to that part of the animal body.—Hume. History of England, an. 1659.

RU'NDLE. } i. e. a roundlet, from its shape, RU'NDLET. } (Skinner.) In Chapman, "his rundled target" is—his rounded target.

But Ajax a farre greater stone lift up, and (wreathing round,
With all his body layd to it) he sent it forth to wound,
And gave unmeasur'd force to it; the round stone broke within
His rundled target.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

I have sent you a runlet of it [wine] in the ship Lion, and

RU'NNET. Also written rennet, (qv.) In Gloucestershire it is called running, (Grose.)

— As nourishing milke, when runnet is put in, Runnes all in heapes of tough thicke curd, though in his nature thinne.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

RUNT, or } A Scotch or Welch runt. Oxen, RONT. } says Lye, of a much smaller size than ours. Also applied to trees of a stunted growth; to a withered old woman. In Dutch, rind, rund, is bos; in German, rind is also bos.
Wachter derives from rennen, co-ire; the word being properly applied to cattle reserved for breeding; but this does not account for the application of the word to stunted trees, &c. unless we suppose it to have been first restricted to dwarfish kine, and thence extended to trees, &c.
But see Jamieson, and Moore's Suffolk Words.

 to derive rus from an obsolete theme, pu-ew, rum- pere, rus being—quod rumpitur, laceratur aratro, that which is broken, torn asunder by the plough, thus making rus mean earth, from the A. S. Er- ian, which is considered by Tooke to have given the Lat. Ar-are. May not rus have had the same origin?

Rurals, n.—countrymen, clowns.

Rural, adj.—of or pertaining to the country;
 having the qualities or properties of country, as opposed to town; suited or adapted to the country.

Where vertue is in a gentyl man, it is commonly myxte

 Oft too the coward hare, then only bold
 When mischief prompts, or wint'ry famine pines,
 Will quit her rush-grown form, and steal, with ear
 Up-prick'd, to gnaw the toils.
Mason. English Garden, b. ii.

A narrow brook, by rushy banks conceal'd,
 Runs in a bottom, and divides the field.
Cowper. Needless Alarm.

RUSSET, adj. } Fr. Rouset; It. Rossèto;

A goodly hotch-potch! when vile russetings
 Are match'd with monarchs, and with mighty kings.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 3.

Henceforth my woing minde shall be exprest
 In russet yeas, and honest kersie noes.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

—Whole provinces
 Appear to our sight then, even leek
 A russet-mole upon a lady's cheek.
Middleton. The Witch, Act 1. sc. 2.

Even his Doric dialect has an incomparable sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country russet, talking in a Yorkshire tone.—Dryden. Theocritus, Pref.

Thus solitary, and in pensive guise,
 Oft let me wander o'er the russet mead,
 And through the sadden'd grove, where scarce is heard
 One dying strain to cheer the woodman's toil.
Thomson. Autumn.

For me, when I forget the darling theme,
 Whether the blossom blows, the summer-ray
 Russets the plain, inspiring autumn gleams,
 Or winter rises in the blackening east;
 Be my tongue mute, my fancy paint no more,
 And dead to joy, forget my heart to beat.—Id. A Hymn.

Far as the eye could reach no tree was seen,
 Earth, clad in russet, scorn'd the lively green.
Churchill. Prophecy of Famine.

RUST, n. } A. S. Rust, rustian; Ger. Rost; RUST, v. } Dut. Roest; Sw. Rost, perhaps Ru'STY. } (see Wachter,) from the Lat.
 Ru'STINESS. } Russus, and so applied from the (russet) colour it gives to the surface of metals:
 but as dross is from dreos-an, so rosse or rust, may be from reos-an or hreos-an, to rush, to fall. (See Dross.) Rust, v. is used (met.)—

To spoil for want of use, of action or exertion;
 to feel or move as if clogged by rust.

But gadir ye to you tresouris in hevne, where neither rust ne mought distrieth and where thefis delven not out and stelen.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 6.

Rust of defame is inseparable.

Some armed with leather, and some with rusty mayle, and some there were ryght well armed.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 215.

In like wyse as wee see by rusty and cankered pottes when they shall be made cleane, fyrst they rubbe away the ruste, and after that washe it with water. So did this holy pro-phete, fyrst by his wepyng scoured and made full cleane his soule from the rustinesse and cankerynge of his foule syn, and after washed it with wepyng teares.
Fysher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 6.

But at her feet her sword was likewise layde,
 Whose long rest rusted the bright steely brand;
 Yet whenas foes enforst, or friends sought ayde,
 She could it sternely draw, that all the world dismayde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

And on his arme a bounch of keyes he bore,
 The which unused rust did overgrow.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 8.

Our rational faculties, which being unemploy'd will naturally contract rust, and grow every day more weak and restive.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. iii. c. 3.

The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,
For want of fighting, was grown rusty.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

Strange doctrine this! that without scruple tears
The laurel, that the very lightning spares;
Brings down the warrior's trophy to the dust,
And eats into his bloody sword like rust.

Cowper. Table Talk.

RUSTICK, adj. Fr. Rustique; It. Rustico; Sp. Rustico; Lat. Rusticus, from rus. See RURAL.
RUSTICKLY, n. Of or pertaining to the country; having the manners of the country; plain, unadorned, simple; also rude, uncivilized, unpolished.

RUSTICATION, v. Rustification.—husbandry, country business, rural work; also, a dwelling in the country, (Cotgrave;) and in the latter usage it is explained by Cockeram.

The Lacedemones sometime purposely caused their rusticall seruantes to be made very drunk.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 21.

They were called Paramisadans, beinge a rusticall kinde of men, and most rude amonges al the barbarous nations.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 179.

By these examples it doth appere how good men dyd alwaye flee from rewardes all though they mought haue ben lefully taken, whiche in them was neyther folyshenes nor yet rusticitie, but of a prudent consideracion.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 16.

This poet, more circumspect then Theocritus, as the matter it self declareth, seemeth to doubt least that eclogue which is intituled Pollio, will not appeare rusticklike enough.

Phaer. Virgill's Life, p. 14.

But let that same delicious poet lend
A little leave unto a rusticke Muse
To sing his mistresse prayse; and let him mend,
If ought amis her liking may abuse.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. Introd.

Which he perceiving kindly doth entreat,
Reproves the rustics for that offer'd wrong,
Averting it an injury too great,
To such, of right, all kindness did belong.

Drayton. Moses his Birth & Miracles, b. i.

To you it seemes so, (rustickly.) Ajax Oileus said;
Your words are suited to your eyes. Those maides leade still that led.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

Whether he useth them by such casuallie and custome, or of set purposes and choise, as thinking them fittest for such rustical rudenesse of shepheards, either for that their rough sound would make his rimes more ragged and rusticall, or else because such old and obsolete wordes are most used of country folke.—Spenser. Epistle to Maister Harvey.

Now as these men have no regard at all to the speculation of Nature, and to the course of the stars; so the other before-named are given to much thereto, and rapt they are so high among the stars and planets, that their owne eies bee dazeld therewith; and besides, their subtilties and quiddities doe blind others, considering that the practise of these matters must passe through the hands of rusticall peasants, who are so far off from conceiving astronomie and the constellations above, that they know not one letter of the book, nor never learned their A B C.

Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 24.

My brother Jaques he keepes at schoole, and report speakes goldenly of his profit; for my part, he keepes me rustically at home, or (to speak more properly) staies me heere at home vnkept.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 1.

RUT

Some will wonder how this shire, lying so near to London, the staple of English civilitie, should be guilty of so much rusticalness.—Fuller. Worthies. Hartford-shire.

Seemeth that such wilde woodes should far expell

All civile usage and gentility,
And gentle sprite deforme with rude rusticity.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Lay bashfulness, that rustic virtue, by;
To manly confidence thy thoughts apply.

Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love, b. i.

Hence to your fields, you rusticks! hence away,
Nor stain with grief the pleasures of the day.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

The truth of it is, the sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well expressed in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixed and qualified with the Doric dialect.—Addison. Essay on Virgil's Georgics.

The time is now come when the town is again beginning to be full, and the rusticated beauty sees an end of her banishment.—Idler, No. 80.

RUSTLE, v. A. S. Hristlan; Ger. Raseln; Dut. Ruyselen; from RUSTLING, n. Goth. Hrisyan, to shake.

To make the noise of things shaken; of armour, (in Pliny,) silk, straw, leaves, &c.; now generally confined to that of things similar in substance to the latter.

Being charged to make a signe to declare if he were a dumbe spirite, he russeled and made a noise againe, and that was the sign and token.

Fox. Actes, p. 1176. Hen. VIII.

As he let his sword fall upon it, another knight all in black came rustling in, who struck the shield almost as soon as he, and so strongly that he brake the shield in two.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Ab. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is comming, sir, he is comming; I heare his straw russele.—Shakes. Meas. for Meas. Act iv. sc. 3.

In the time of the Cimbrian warres, we have been told that armour was heard to rustle, and the trumpet to sound out of heaven.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 57.

Her bow and quiver at her back behind,
That easly moving with the wanton wind,
Made a soft rustling, such as you do hear Amongst the reeds some gliding river near.

Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

Not the sea, when up, the North-spirit blows
Her raging billows, bellows so against the beaten shore;
Not such a rustling keeps a fire, driven with violent blower.
Through woods that grow against a hill.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear,
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood, and sees
His course at distance by the bending trees.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

A house there is (and that's enough)
From whence one fatal morning issues
A brace of warriors not in buff,
But rustling in their silks and tissues.

Gray. A Long Story.

When the noise of a torrent, the rustle of a wood, the song of birds, or the play of lambs, had power to fill the attention, and suspend all perception of the course of time.

The Idler, No. 44.

He spoke; a rustling urges through the trees;
Instant new vigour strings his active knees.

Mickle. The Lusiad, b. ix.

RUT, v. Fr. Ruit, reat, from the Lat. RUT, n. Rugitus, and rere, to bellow as a stag, from rugire, (See Menage.)

Rut,—from the noise the deer make at the season when they seek to copulate.

After cours of conception, non tok kepe of other
As when thei hadde rutted, anon thei resten after.

Piers Ploughman, p. 222.

They [deere] begin to goe to rut after the rising of the starre Arcturus, which is much about the fift of September.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 32.

And there arose such rut th' unruly rout among,
That soon the noise thereof through all the ocean rung.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

Soph. Pray be not mistaken; by this hand
Your wife's as chaste and honest as a virgin,
For any thing I know; 'tis true she gave me
A ring.

Petru. For rutting.

Soph. You are much deceiv'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Tamer Tamed, Act iv. sc. 3.

RYE

That is an aduertisement to a proper maide in Florence, one Diana, to take heede of the allurements of one Count Rossillion, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very rustish.

Shakespeare. Alf's Well that's Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 3.

What piety forbids the lusty ram
Or more salacious goat, to rut their dam.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

RUT. } See ROUT.
RUTTY. } The rout, course, or tract, (sc. of a wheel.)

— And as from hills raine waters headlong fall
That all wayes eate huge ruts, which met in one bed, fill a vall

With such a confluence of streames, that on the moun-taine grounds

Farre off, in frighted shepheards' eares, the bustling noise rebounds.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

To behold thee not painted inclines somewhat neere

A miracle; these in thy face here, were deep rutts.

Webster. The Dutchesse of Malfy, Act ii. sc. 1.

That heav'nly voice I more delight to heare,
Than gentle airs to breathe, or swelling waves
Against the sounding rocks their bosoms tear,
Or whistling reeds, that rustly Jordan laves.

Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

I was almost killed between Sheffield Place and East Grinstead, by hard, frozen, long and cross ruts, that would disgrace the approach of an Indian wigwam.

Gibbon to Lord Sheffield, Jan. 1794.

RUTH. See RUE.

RUTILANT. Lat. Rutilare, rutilus, from Gr. Ερυθρος, red; Fr. Rutiler, "to glisten, glitter, shine, glare," (Cotgrave.)

Parchments coloured with this rutilant mixture.

Evelyn, b. ii. c. 4. s. 1.

RUTTER. Fr. Reistre, a German horseman, (Cotgrave.) Ger. Reiter, reuter, equians, eques, from reiten, to ride.

A rider; a horseman, a cavalier.

In the same season there was a cōpany of rutters gadered together in the wode of Respayle.

Berners. Proissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 1.

And with them there was a great routter of Byerne, the lorde of Launce playne.—Id. Id. c. 119.

Neither shal they be accompanied wyth a garde of ruffelynge rutters.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

But now we have in maner generallie given over that kind of artillerie, and certes, the Frenchmen and rutters, deriding our new archerie in respect of their corslets, will not let in open skirmish, if anie leisure serve, to turn up their tails, and crie, "Shoote Englishe!" and all because our strong shooting is decayed and laid in bed.

Sir T. More. Utopia, by Robinson, b. ii. c. 10.

If brauerie or honour can make the an happie man, Lettes by a cut throte rutterkin
whiche in beste mannor can Recyte thy tytles, and thy names, who also muche reioyses
To craue, and iog those on the syde that haue th' electinge voyces.

Drant. Horace. Ep. to Numitius.

Soph. It should be but by'r lady
She holds him out at pike's end, and defies him,
And now is fortifi'd, such a regiment of rutters
Never defied men braver.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Tamer Tamed, Act i. sc. 4.

RUTTER. See ROUT.

RYE. A. S. Ryge, rige; Ger. Rocken; Dut. Rogge; Sw. Rogh. Skinner thinks from hrige; the ridge, q. d. ridged with prickles or spikes. Wachter thinks otherwise. See ROCKEN.

A quarter of whete was solde at London for xvij. and derer shuld haue been, had nat ben the proucyon of mar-chautes that brought rye and rye floure out of Spruce.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1402.

That which is called secale and farrago in Latine, [i. e. rie.] needeth no more adoe but to be harrowed and the clods well broken.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 16.

S.

S (says B. Jonson) is a most easy and gentle letter, and softly hisseth against the teeth in prolation. It is called the serpent's letter. It varieth the powers much in our pronunciation. It sometimes inclineth to z, as in muse, wise. So after the liquids, as bells, gems, wens, burs. Where the vowel sets hard, it is commonly doubled. Bp. Wilkins observes, that it is framed by an appulse of the tongue towards the upper teeth or gums, and then forcing out the breath from betwixt the tongue and the upper teeth. The disability of pronouncing this letter is called lisp-ing, when it is corruptly sounded th. It is of the same affinity with z, as p with b, t with d, c with g.

SA'BBATH. Fr. Sabbath; It. Sabbato; Sp. Sabado. Fr. Sabatizer, to rest, or keep holy the sabbath day. Sabbath is applied, consequentially, to—SA'BBATHLESS.
SABBA'TIC.
SABBA'TICAL.
SABBATA'RIAN, adj.
SABBATA'RIAN, n.
SABBATA'RIANISM. A time of rest; a cessation from toil, trouble, or any affliction.

And it was don eftsoones whanne the Lord walkide in the sabatis bi the cornes, and hise discipulis bigunnen to passe forth & plucke eeris of the corn.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 2.

For all that moveth doth in change delight;
 But thenceforth all shall rest eternally
 With him that is God of Sabaoth hight;
 O! that great Sabaoth God, grant me that sabbath's sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 8. Underfile.

And although men should refrain themselves from injury and evil arts, yet this incessant and sabbathless pursuit of a man's fortune leaveth not that tribute which we owe to God of our time, who, we see, demandeth a tenth of our substance, and a seventh, which is more strict, of our time.
Bacon. Of Learning, b. ii.

Only there is mention of a sabbath in the second verse of this chapter, of which there were no words before. And this is that sabbatisme or rest, that the author to the Hebrews exhorts them to strive to enter into through faith and obedience.—More. Defence of the Moral Cabbala, c. 2.

The Jews doo reckon their daies by their distance from their sabaoth, so that the first daie of their weeke is the first daie of the sabaoth and so fourth vnto the sixt.
Holinshed. Description of England, c. 14.

Laws against profanation; I do not mean tending to Judaism or sabbatarianism.—Bp. Ward. Ser. 30, Jan. (1673.)

Sabbatarian paradoxes, and Apocalyptical frensies under the name and covert of the true professors of Protestant doctrine.—Mountagu. An Appeal to Caesar, Ded.

Now if this can be made out, I think there is as sure and effectual a foundation laid for the perpetual obligation to observe the sabbath as the strictest of the sabbatarians can desire.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 12.

The famous sabbatical river for six days bears all before it with a mighty torrent, and carries stones of such incredible bigness that there is no passing over it: the admirable nature of that river is, that it keeps the sabbath and rests all that day.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Even many of their laws (for instance, the law of jealousy, those for the attendance of the Jews at their three great festivals, and for their resting in the sabbatic year) were so contrived, as to be demonstrative proofs of the immediate interposition of God in the affairs of that people.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 4.

But with his clumsy port the wretch has lost
 His ignorance and harmless manners too.
 To swear, to game, to drink; to show at home
 By lewdness, idleness, and sabbath breach,
 The great proficiency he made abroad.—Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Profanation of the Lord's day, vulgarly (but improperly) called sabbath-breaking, is a ninth offence against God and religion, punished by the municipal law of England.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

SA'BLE, n. Fr. Sable; It. Zibellino; Sp. Cebellinas; Ger. Zabel; Sw. Sabel. A skin, (says Wachter,) imported from Siberia, and hence the name of Sibelineæ for Siberinae. For other conjectures see Menage in vv. Ermine, and Marte Sabline.

The armes the which that Cupide bare,
 Were pearced hartes with teares besprent,
 In siluer and sable to declare
 The stedfast loue he alwayes ment.
Vncertaine Auctors. Thassault of Cupide.

Next him went Griefe and Fury matcht yfere;
 Griefe all in sable sorrowfully clad,
 Downe hanging his dull head with heavy chere,
 Yet inly being more then seeming sad.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Ophe. Nay, 'tis twice two moneths, my Lord.
Ham. So long? Nay then let the diuel weare blacke, for I'le haue a suite of sables.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 2.

Nought but profoundest hell can be his shroud;
 In vain with timbrel'd anthems dark
 The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshipt ark.
Milton. On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, s. 24.

And sabled all in black the shady sky.
Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Last came the felon, on his sable steed,
 Arm'd with his naked sword, and urg'd his dogs to speed.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

At the same time I had a present from his daughter of a handsome sable muff.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 9.

SA'BRE, n. Ger. Sabel; Dut. and Sw. Sa- SA'BRE, v. bel; Fr. Sabre. From the Arabic Seif, gladius. See Wachter and Ihre.

A radiant sabre grac'd his purple zone,
 And on his foot the golden sandal shone.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

You send troops to sabre and bayonet us into submission.
Burke.

SA'CCHARINE. Fr. Saccharin; It. Zac- SA'CCHARIZE, v. cherino; Lat. Saccharum: which, (Vossius says,) is in the Arab. Saccar. Pliny calls it a kind of honey, gathered and candied in certain canes. (See SUGAR, and the quotation from Pliny.) Vossius adds, that the name Saccha- rium was given (to sugar), because it resembled this kind of honey so gathered from canes.

Sugary,—having the properties of, or resembling those of sugar.

Manna, which is an essential saccharine salt, sweating from the leaves of most plants.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 3.

It is hoped the reader will pardon the introduction of the verb saccharize, as no other so emphatically expressed the author's meaning; for some chymists define sugar to be a native salt, and others a soap.
Grainger. The Sugar-cane, b. i. Note.

SACERDO'TAL. Fr. Sacerdot, sacerdotal; SACERDO'TE. It. Sacerdote, sacerdotale; Sp. Sacerdote, sacerdotal; Lat. Sacerdos; one who administers, presides over sacred things, sacred rites or ceremonies; a priest.

Priestly; of or pertaining to a priest or a minister of religion.

Eld. Lov. I'le rather love a fever and continual thirst, rather contract my youth to drink and sacerdote upon quarrels, or take a drawn whore from an hospital, that time, diseases, and mercury had eaten, than to be drawn to love you.—Beaum. & Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, Act iv.

The ancient Fathers are still more particular in expounding the sacerdotal consecration, and the divine sanctification consequent thereupon.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 93.

Clemens,—who adds to epistolary writing, sacerdotal, a way of writing, though like the epistolary, by an alphabet, yet being confined to the use of the priests, not so well known, he with equal judgment explains their nature.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 4.

SA'CHEL. Lat. Sacculus; Ger. Seckel; dim. of sack.

A small sack or bag.

Sille ye tho thingis that ye han in possessioun: & gyue ye almes, and make ye to you sachels that wexen not oold, tresour that faylith not in heuenes.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 12.

Our leader draweth together, his riches into his toure, and thei been ententif, about sarpleris or sachelles, vnprofitable for to taken.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Dutch. And that fine little eye to it, like an elephant's, Lord. Yes if her feet were round and her ears sachels.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Woman Pleas'd, Act v. sc. 2.

Mor. O my importunate belly, I have nothing to satisfie thee; I have sought, As far as my weak legs would carry me, Yet can find nothing: neither meat nor water; Nor any thing that's nourishing, My bellies grown together like an empty sachel.
Id. The Sea-Voyage, Act iii. sc. 1.

Then he shewed the avarice and ambition of the clergy on former days; and how the Bishop of Rome abused Peter's keys to fill Judas's sachel.
Styrie. Memorials. Edw. VI. b. ii. c. 15.

The shell-fish is collected by the women, whose business it seems to be to attend at low water, with a basket in one hand, a stick, pointed and barbed, in the other, and a sachel at their backs.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

SACK, n. A.S. Saec; Fr. Sac; It. SACK, v. Sacco; Sp. Saca; Lat. Sac- SA'CKCLOTHED. cus; Gr. Sakkis, a word, (says SA'CKFUL, n. Skinner,) common to all languages,—a relic, as it is believed, of the antediluvian tongue; and hence the verb, to sack, saccos expilare. (See SACK, infra.) Vossius derives the Greek from the Hebrew. Commonly—
 A large bag (for corn, flour, coals, &c.); a large loose robe.

"Lord Jhesus," he said, "als so verreyly
 "As my luf is on the laid, & on thi moder Mary,
 "Help me to venge thi dede of this Sarazins kynd,
 "That gaf conseille & rede, the to bete & bynd,
 "& namly on that blode, that com of fals Pilate,

Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

The Lacedæmonians had a peculiar custom of sacrificing to the Muses, which was either designed to soften and mollify their passionate transports, it being their custom to enter the battle calm and sedate, or to animate them to perform noble and heroical exploits, deserving to be transmitted by those goddesses to posterity.
Potter. Antiquities of Greece, b. iii. c. 9.

The soothsayers inspected all the sacrifices, to presage the success of the battle; and, till the omens proved favourable, they rather chose tamely to resign their lives to the enemy than to defend themselves.—Id. Ib.

Although his [Jephthah] vow run generally for the words, Whatsoever shall come forth, &c. yet might it be restrained in the sence, for whatsoever was sacrificable, and justly subject to lawfull immolation.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 14.

Homer did believe there were certain evil demons, who took pleasure in fumes and nidours of sacrifices; and that they were ready, as a reward, to gratify the sacrificants with the destruction of any person, if they so desired it.
Halliwell. Metam. p. 102.

It being therefore a sacrifice so abominable unto God, although he had pursued it, it is not probable the priests and wisdom of Israel would have permitted it; and that not onely in regard to the subject or sacrifice it self, but also the sacrificator, which the picture makes to be Jephthah.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 14.

Potter. Antiquities of Greece, b. iv. c. 1.

Plato makes it the necessary introduction to his laws, to establish the being and providence of the Gods by a law against sacrilege. And he explains what he means by sacrilege, in the following words:—"Either the denial of the being of the Gods; or, if that be owned, the denial of their providence over men; or, thirdly, the teaching, that they are flexible, and easy to be cajoled by prayer and sacrifice.—Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. § 3.

ment. Sad then, is—

Fixed, firm, compact, cohesive, heavy, dense, gloomy.

Sedate, grave, serious, gloomy, melancholy, grievous, mournful.

A sad man is—a sedate, grave man.

A sad fellow is—one who does serious things,— things of serious consequence; and thus,—a mischievous fellow.

inges, by the gylden trentalles, and salaries to sing.
Fryth. Workes, p. 101.

Moreover, this tearme in Latine of sal, is taken up and used in warre, yea, and divers honours and dignities bestowed upon brave men for some worthe service, goe under this name, and bee called salaries.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 7.

As to my sallary, he told me, I should have 24 dollars per month, which was as much as he gave to the old gunner.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1690.

The latter [the Romans] also made salt part of the pay of their soldiers, which was called salarium; and from which is derived our word salary.—Pennant. Tour from Chester.

the exertion of leaping.

Rough, rugged, rutty.

— We now again proceed
Thorough a vale that's salebrous indeed;
— bruising our flesh and bones;
To thrust betwixt massy and pointed stones.
Cotton. Wonders of the Peake, (1681.)

I believe not him that said, if crownes were rightly viewed, there would be more kingdoms than kings: for nature rises to sovereignty, and there is a blaze of honour gilding the bryers and inticing the mind: yet is not this without its thornes and salebrosity.
Feltham. Upon Eccles. ii. 2.

SALUS'GINOUS. } sal, salt.
Having the qualities of salt; having or causing to have the nature of salt.

We read in Plutarch, that Philippus Libertus washed the body of Pompey with salt water, which perhaps might be either because it was more absterive, or that it helped to prevent putrefaction; and it is not improbable the Egyptians might have been accustomed to wash the body with the same pickle they used in salination;—in order to preserving and embalming it.
Greenhill. Art of Embalming, p. 59.

When wood and many other bodies do petrify, either by the sea, other waters, or earths abounding in such spirits;
we do not usually ascribe their induration to cold, but rather unto salinuous spirits, concretionary juices, and causes cir-cumjacent, which do assimilate all bodies not indisposed for their impressions.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

The knowledge of the distinction of salts which we have proposed, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or saluginous (if I may, for distinction sake, so call the fugitive salts of animal substances) and fixed or alcalinate.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 765.

There is one material refreshment which this easterne side of Patagonia seems to be very defective in, and that is fresh waters; for the land being generally of a nitrous and saline nature, the ponds and streams are frequently brackish.
Anson. Voyages, c. 5.

He [Aristotle] supposed (and mankind were for ages content with the solution) that the sun continually raised dry saline exhalations from the earth, and deposited them upon the sea; and hence, say his followers, the waters of the sea are more salt at top than at bottom.
Goldsmith. Hist. of the Earth, c. 15.

certain glands, called salival.

In the room of the said glands, they [woodpecker and other birds] have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as it were a natural bird-lime or liquid glew. Which, by small canals, like the salival, being brought into their mouths, they dip their tongues herein: and so, with the help of this natural bird-lime, attack the prey.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

The methods of salivating are divers, but all by mercury;

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1477.

Some bare his salette in his hande, some on his backe, some drew the swerdes after them naked, and some in the shethes.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 186.

And I think, this word sallet was born to do me good:
for many a tyme, but for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and, many a time, when I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.—Shakespeare. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 10.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

The most common salutation was by the conjunction of their right hands, the right hand being accounted a pledge of fidelity and friendship; whence Pythagoras advised that the right hand should not be given to every man, meaning that all persons were not fit to be made our friends.
Potter. Antiquities of Greece, b. iv. c. 19.

I sent a lieutenant ashore to acquaint the governor of our arrival, and to make an excuse for our not saluting; for as I could salute only with three guns, except the swivels, which I was of opinion would not be heard, I thought it was better to let it alone.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 10.

But at the very time while he is bowing at the threshold of the rich man, the philosopher shall pass by, and because he possesses only a competency without superfluity, and without influence, he shall not be honoured with the common civility of a salutation.—Knox, Ess. 88.

SALVE, v. } Goth. Salbon, ungere, to SALVE, n. } anoint; A. S. Sealfian; Ger.
SA'LVING, n. } Salben; Dut. Salfen, salven; Sw. Saliva, unguentum. All of which (Junius thinks) have a wonderful affinity with the Gr. Αλειφειν, to anoint, to rub, or smear with ointment. To salve, is,—

To mollify, assuage or mitigate, to relieve, to aid or help, to remedy, to apply a remedy, to heal, to rescue;—to save or keep safe. There seems a confusion in the usage of the verb to salve;—sometimes as if from the A. S. Sealfian; and, sometimes, as if from salve. See SALVATION.

For treuthe telleth that love. ys tryacle for synne
And most sovereyne salve. for saule and for body.
Piers Ploughman, p. 20.

To other woundes, and to broken armes,
Som hadden salves, and som hadden charmes.
Chaucer. The Knight's Tale, v. 2713.

As whē we say of a wanton child, this sheepe hath magottes in his tayle, he must be annoynted with byrchin salve, which speach I borow of the shepheardes.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 166.

Which Cambell seeing, though he could not salve,
Ne done undoe, yet, for to salve his name
And purchase honour to his friends behalve,
This goodly counterfesaunce he did frame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

All wrongs have mendes, but no amendes of shame,
Now therefore, lady, rise out of your paine,
And see the salving of your blotted name.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

"But mine is not," quoth she, "like other wond; for which no reason can finde remedy."
"Was never such, but mote the like be found,"
Said she; "and though no reason may apply
Salve to your sore, yet Love can higher stye
Then Reason's reach, and oft hath wonders donne."
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

Epicurus, (who was also an atomick atheist,) having, in all probability, therefore a mind to innovate something, that he might not seem to have borrowed all from Democritus, did by violence introduce liberty of will, into his hypothesis; for the salving whereof, he ridiculously devized that his Third Motion of Atoms, called by Lucretius, Exiguum Clinamen Principiorum.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, Pref. p. vi.

SA'MBUKE. A musical instrument; perhaps so called, because made of the sambuke or elder tree.

And whatsoever ye iudge, this I am sure, that lutes, harpes, all maner of pypes, barbitons, sambukes, with other instrumentes every one, whiche standeth by fine and quicke fingeringe, be condemned of Aristotle, as not to be broughte in and used among them, which studye for learnynge and vertue.—Ascham. Toxophilus, b. i.

SAME, adj. } Goth. Samo; A. S. Same; congregare, to collect or bring together to summon, (sc.) into one place, at one time; congerere, to form into one heap, mass, or body; to counite, to conjoin into one. (See the quotation from R. Brunne, and To SUMMON.) And, hence, same is—

One in nature or kind, in qualities; having or possessing unity or oneness; having no sensible difference. And see the quotation from Locke.

To Paris turned the kyng, for that ilk sawe, & ther a samenyng his barons thider gan drawe.

R. Brunne, p. 143.

When my fader and she suilk samenyng can make.

What soeuer is done to the lest of vs (whether it be good or bad) it is done to Christ, and what soeuer is done to my brother (if I be a Christen mā) that same is done to me.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 383.

Much more than that which was in Paphos built,
Or that in Cyprus, both long since this same,
Though all the pillours of the one were guilt,
And all the others pavement were with yvory spilt.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

For what concord han light and darke sam?

Id. The Shepheard's Calender. June.

There are some who would persuade us, that body and extension are the same thing who change the signification of words, which I would not suspect them of, they having so severely condemned the philosophy of others.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 13.

Whatever substance begins to exist, it must, during its existence, necessarily be the same; whatever compositions of substances begin to exist, during the union of those substances, the concrete must be the same; whatsoever mode begins to exist, during its existence, it is the same.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 27.

We worship the Father of Truth, and the Son the Truth itself, being two things as to hypostasis; but one in agreement, consent, and sameness of will.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 559.

A sameness of the terms, if it really existed, would be an argument for assigning one and the same meaning to the promises.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

SA'MITE. Fr. Samy,—which Cotgrave calls “a silken or half silk-stuff, which hath a gloss like satin, and is narrower but lasteth better than sillf that he appere now to the chere of God for us.

Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 9.

Alas then, O love, why dost thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire to take out, which is as much impossible!—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Walla by chance was in a meadow by,
Learning to sample earth's embroidery.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Whole troops of heroes Greece has yet to boast,
And sends thee one, a sample of her host.
Such as I am, I come to prove thy might.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

A naturalist, before he chose one as a sample, would examine many, since, if he took the first that occurred, it might have, by accident or otherwise, such a form as that it would scarcely be known to belong to that species.—Idler, No. 82.

To both these kinds of cloth they work borders of different colours, in stitches somewhat like carpeting, or rather like those used in the samplers which girls work at school.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 9.

Our traders deal out knowledge in bulky volumes, and our girls forsake their samplers to teach kingdoms wisdom.

spiritual foode to serue to sanctimonie, not to sacietie.

Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, p. 285.

Ainulphus of royal British bloud was an holy hermit, who, waving the vanities of this wicked world, betook himself in this county to a solitary life, renowned for the sanctity (or rather sanctimony) thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Bedfords.

When in that way they went, next Sebert them succeeds, Scarce seconded again for sanctimonious deeds.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

Alb. Let these tears tell how I honor ye;
Ye know dear lady, since ye are mine,
How truly I have lov'd ye, how sanctimoniously
Observ'd your honor.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act i. sc. 1.

Two of far nobler shape erect and tall,
Godlike erect, with native honour clad
In naked majestie seemd lords of all,
And worthie seemd, for in thir looks divine
The image of their glorious maker shon,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
Severe, but in true filial freedom plac'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

About him all the sanctities of heaven
Stood thick as starrs, and from his sight receiv'd Beatitude past utterance.

Id. Ib. b. iii.

But cause of feare sure had she none at all
Of him, who goodly learned had of yore
The course of loose effection to forstall,
And lawlesse lust to rule with reasons lore;
That all the while he by his side he bore,
She was as safe as in a sanctuary.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

Kin. No place indeed should murder sancturize.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

Those men have little or no sense of religion, that make no conscience of sanctifying that day, or that put no difference between it and other days.—Sharp, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Wherefore likewise doth Saint Peter ascribe our election to the Father predestinating, to the Son propitiating, to the Holy Ghost sanctifying?—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 34.

Another of these ordinary operations of the Spirit, is sanctification; which consists in the purifying our wills and affections from those wicked inclinations and inordinate lusts, which countermand God's will in us, and set us at enmity against him.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

Law is to things, which to free choice relate;
Love is not in our choice, but in our fate;
Laws are put positive; love's power we see,
Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

Ev'n then her awful sanctity appear'd;
The swains the local majesty rever'd.

SAND, n.

SAND, v.

SANDED.

SANDBISH.

SANDY.

A. S. Sand; Ger. Dut. and Sw.
Sand; Waamos, from ψαειν, commi- nuere; to break or bruise into small particles:—all the etymologists (though with some doubt).

The A. S. Sund-rian, synd-rian, to sunder, presents an obvious origin: sundred, separated into the smallest particles.

Sanded,—means of a sandy colour, which is one of the true denotements of a blood-hound, (Steevens.)

Sand-blind,—having the sight blinded; the appearances of floating particles, small as sand.

His folk went vpto lond, him seluen was the last,
To bank ouer the sand, plankes thei ouer kast.

dashed on a rock, for ever after fear not that mischance only, but all such dangers whatsoever.

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 148.

But th' heedful boteman strongly forth did stretch
His brawnie armes, and all his bodie straine,
That th' utmost sandy breach they shortly fetch,
Whiles the dread daunger does behind remaine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Plant the tenuifolia's and ranunculus's in fresh sandish earth, taken from under the turf.—Evelyn. Kalendar.

Why Signiors, and my honest neighbors, will you impute that as a neglect of my friends, which is an imperfection in me? I have been sand-blind from my infancy.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Martial Maid, Act i. sc. 2.

Philip's great son, whose consecrated name
Memphis adores, the first in regal fame,
Envious of this, detach'd a chosen band
To range th' extreme of Ethiopia's sand!

Hughes. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

On some there are a few low bushes of Burton-wood, but they are mostly barren and sandy, bearing nothing but only a little chicken-weed.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1675.

And the sands being composed of parts, almost as small as those of water, they assume similar appearance, rolling onward in waves like those of a troubled sea, and overwhelming all they meet with inevitable destruction.

Goldsmith. History of the Earth, c. 2.

They established their precepts on the firm basis of revealed religion, and not on the sandy foundation of human systems.—Knox. Ess. 22.

SANDAL. Fr. Sandale; It. Sandal; Sp. Sandalia; Lat. Sandalium; Gr. Σανδαλιον, pro σαδάλιον. Lemess thinks—from σαττειν, onerare, to load. Scheideus,—from σανις, σανιδος, tabula lignea, because originally made of wooden boards, bound to the soles of the feet.

And commaundide hem that thei schulden not take any thing in the weye but a yerde oneli, not a scrippe, ne breed, nether money in ther girdil: but schood with sandals, and that thei schulden not be clothid with twele cootis.

Wiclif. Mark, c. 6.

A silly man, in simple weeds forworne,
And sold with dust of the long dried way;
His sandales were with toilsome travell torne,
And face all tand with scorching sunny ray.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Neither have they the use of stockings and shoes, but a sort of sandals are worn by the better sort.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

Whoever may be sovereign of Egypt, it [Anthilla] is assigned perpetually as part of the revenues of the queens, and appropriated to the particular purpose of providing them with sandals.—Beloe. Herodotus. Euterpe, c. 98.

SANE. Fr. Saner, sanable; It. Sano, SA'NABLE. } sanare, sanabile; Sp. Sanar, SA'NABLE. } sanare, sanabile; Lat. Sanabilis, that may be made sound: sanare, sanus, Gr. Σαος, sound, whole.

Sanable,—that may be made whole, that may be healed or cured; healable, curable.

Sane, (met.)—sound, healthy in mind or mental faculties.

O medicine, sanatife to sores langorous.

Chaucer. The Craft of Lovers.

Those that are sanable or preservable from this dreadful sin of idolatry may find the efficacy of our antidote.

More. Antidote against Idolatry, Pref.

Neither was it onely the peculiar judgement of the priest, that was here intended; but the thankfulness of the patient; that by the sacrifice which he should bring with him, he might give God the glory of his sanation.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Ten Lepers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that wounds which are made with brass, heal more easily, than wounds made with iron. The cause is, for that brass hath, in it selfe, a sanative vertue.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 787.

England affordeth most sanative waters for English bodies, if men were as judicious in taking, as nature is bountiful in tendering them.—Fuller. Worthies. England, c. 2.

sapit, hoc est sapida est. All, perhaps, from the A. S. Sip-an, syp-an, macerare, humectare, irrigare, to steep, to sop, to moisten, to water. And applied to—

The moisture or juice of plants. See SAP, infra.

(O how it pleas'd my fancie ones) to kneele vpon my knees,
To griffe a pippine stocke, when sappe begins to swell:
But since the gaynes scarce quite the cost, Fanie (quoth he) farewell.—Gascoigne. Vpon the Fruite of Fetters.

As if but one soule in them all did dwell,

Which did her powre into three parts divyde;

Like three faire branches budding farre and wide,

That from one roote deriv'd their vitall sap.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

— Look well upon me,

I am the root that gave thee nourishment,

And made thee spring fair, do not let me perish

Now I am old and sapless.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act i. sc. 3.

And through the cumb'rous thicks, as fearfully he makes,
He with his branched head the tender saplings shakes,
That sprinkling their moist pearl do seem for him to weep.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

The tallow moreover of their wombs [kine and oxen] is so moist and sappie that it neuer waxeth hard, but relenteth of the owne accord, and becommeth like unto oile.

Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 3.

In her left hand a cup of gold she held,

And with her right the riper fruit did reach,

Whose sappy liquor, that with fulnesse sweld,

Into her cup she scruzd with daintie breach

Of her fine fingers.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Some fell the trees, others saw and cut them into convenient logs, and one chips off the sap, and he is commonly a principal man.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

These heartless, sapless services, which had no godliness, no sincerity, no true love of God in them, were not the services which God required, or took delight in.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 218.

The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,

Were turn'd to moisture, for the body's use,

Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Much of their brush or small wood I observed to be very sappy, so that when we brake a twig of it, there would come a substance out of some of it like unto milk; and the sappiness of that underwood may, as I apprehend it, be ascribed in part to the fatness of that soil.

Terry. Voyage to the E. Indies, (1655.) p. 103.

But the sap that made them shoot, and makes them flourish, rises from the root through the trunk, and their productions are varied according to the variety of strainers through which it flows.—Bolingbroke. Let. to Pope.

We recreate our minds and delight our ears with melodious sounds, attemperate the inconstant undulations of the air to musical tunes, add a pleasant voice to a sapless log, and draw a sweet eloquence from a rigid metal.

Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

We all know that the mountain-oak, which is one day to make the strength of our fleets, is of slower growth than the saplings which adorn our gardens.

Hurd. Life of Warburton.

SA'PLATH.

Fr. Sapper; It. Zappare; Sp.

Zapar. Somner says—the A. S.

Sip-an, is, macerare, to soften by steeping in liquor, to soke or wash in water or other liquor, to sappe. Hence to sappe may mean—

SAP

To soak or wash, (sc.) the roots, the foundation; consequentially, to undermine.

To undermine (by any means), to work a way under the foundations (by digging or otherwise), to subvert; to work under ground, out of sight.

In plastering likewise of our fairest houses ouer our heads, we use to laie first a laine or two of white mortar tempered with haire vpon laths, which are nailed one by another (or sometimes vpon reed or wickers more dangerous for fire,) and made fast here and there with sap-laths for falling down.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 12.

There are some beauties so strong, that they are leaguer-proof, they are so barricado'd, that no battery, no petard, or any kind of engine, sapping or mining, can do good upon them.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 4.

These are instruments and tools belonging to pioneers, sappers, diggers, and labouring men.
Trans. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 92.

It [Gibbon] furnishes arguments for the superficial and vicious in defence of scepticism and profligacy, and thus indirectly tends to sap the foundation of human happiness.
Knox, Ess. 23.

At ev'ry draught more large and large they grow,
A bloated mass of rank unwieldy woe;
Till sapp'd their strength, and ev'ry part unsound,
Down, down they sink, and spread a ruin round.

Tasteful; having a high relish or flavour.

There is some sapor in all aliments, as being to be distinguished and judged by the gust, which cannot be admitted in ayr.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet.—Id. Ib.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be ayr, either can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, void of all sapidity, and without any action of the tongue, is by the rough artery or weazon conducted into the lungs.—Id. Ib.

When the Israelites fancied the sapidness and relish of the flesh-pots, they longed to taste and to return.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

We see, that sapidness and volatility are wont to denominate the chymists mercury or spirit; and yet how many bodies, think you, may agree in those qualities, which may yet be of very different natures, and disagree in qualities either more numerous, or more considerable, or both?
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 532.

Now sapour being an accident or an affection of matter, that relates to our tongue, palate, and other organs of taste, it may very possibly be, that the small parts of a body may be of such a size and shape, as either by their extreme littleness, or by their slenderness, or by their figure, to be unable to pierce into and make perceptible impression upon the nerves or membranous parts of the organs of taste.
Id. Ib, vol. i. p. 573.

"I think," says he, "I shall now chiefly apply myself to the reading of such books as are rather persuasive than instructive; such as are sapid, pathetic, and divinely relishing.—Knox. Christian Philosophy, § 32.

Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be.

Donne, Elegy 11.

Jewellers reckon among sapphires not only that sort of azure gems, which usually pass for such, but also another sort of stones, because of their sapphirine degree of hardness.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 525.

Sometimes they appeared quite pellucid, at other times assuming various tints of blue, from a pale sapphirine to a deep violet colour; which were frequently mixed with a ruby or opaline redness.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 13.

SARCENET. Fr. Sarcenet; Low Lat. Saracenicum. Pannus saracenicus operis, (Du Cange,) a very thin and finely woven silk. Sericum saracenicum, (Skinner.) There are no words in Pliny corresponding with those enumerated by his translator.

And surely she [a woman in Coos named Pamphila] is not to be defrauded of her due honour and praise, for the invention of that fine silke, Tiffanie, sarcenet, and cypres, which instead of apparell to cover and hide, shew women naked through them.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 22.

Thou tender heir apparent to a church-ale,
Thou sleight prince of single sarcenet.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act v. sc. 1.

SARCLING. Fr. Sarcler; It. Sarchiellare; Lat. Sarculum, a weeding tool, (from sarrire,) to clear, (sc.) of weeds. Gr. Σαρ-ew, purgare, ver-rere; to cleanse or clear away. Minshew has—
To sarculate,—or weed with a hook;
Sarceling time,—the time when the countryman weedeth his corne.

As for the sarceling or second harrowing, it dooth much good to corne; for by loosening the ground about it, which by the winter cold was hardened, clunged, and (as it were) hide-bound, it is somewhat enlarged and at libertie against the spring tide, and full gladly admitteth and receiveth the benefite of the fresh and new come sunshine daies.

Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 21.

SARCO'PHAGY. Fr. Sarcophage, a stone called eat-flesh, (Cotgrave.) Lat. Sarcophagus; Gr. Σαρκαφαγος, (from σαρξ, flesh, and φαγ-ew, to eat.) See the quotation from Pliny.

Near unto Assos, a citie in Troas, there is found in the quarries a certaine stone called sarcophagus, which runneth in a direct veine, and is apt to be cloven and so cut out of the rocke by flakes. The reason of that name is this, because that within the space of fortie daies it is known for certaine to consume the bodies of the dead which are bestowed therein, skin, flesh, and bone, all save the teeth.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 17.

There was no sarcophagie before the flood; and without the eating of flesh, our fathers from vegetable aliments, preserved themselves unto longer lives, then their posterity by any other.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 25.

Dryden calls it—
An invective poem: i. e. a poem in which the vices and follies of men are inveighed against, exposed, and held out to ridicule, or contempt.

His [Heinsius] chief ground is in effect this, that according to the ancient use and law of satyre, it should be nearer the comedy, than the tragedy, not declaiming against vice, but jeering at it.—Holiday. Juvenal. Pref.

For a satyr as it was born out of a tragedy, so ought to

A branch of laurel yet deserves to bear, Sharply satyric was he.—Drayton. To H. Reynolds, Esq.

Or they be morall, which for the most part be mixed with some satyricall bitterness.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. Argument, p. 20.

Thus does he impie the epidemical impietie of those times, wherein hell was counted rather a fable, than a place of justice, and only such satyrically supposed to believe it, as could not understand it.
Holiday. Juvenal, Sat. 2. Illustrations.

He [Robert Person] had an ill-natured wit, biassed to satyricallness.—Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

I first adventure, with fool-hardy might,
To tread the steps of perilous despite.
I first adventure, follow me who list,
And be the second English satirist.—Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 1.

Amongst the Romans it [the word satire] was not only used for those discourses which decry'd vice, or expos'd folly, but for others also, where virtue was recommended.
But in our modern languages we apply it only to invective poems, where the very name of satire is formidable to those persons, who wou'd appear to the world, what they are not in themselves. For in English, to say satire, is to mean reflection, as we use that word in the worst sense.
Dryden. Ded.

The satyrique, says he, is a dramatick poem, annex'd to a tragedy; having a chorus, which consists of satyrs; the persons represented in it, are illustrious men: the action of it is great; the stile is partly serious, and partly jocular:
and the event of the action most commonly is happy.
Id. Ib.

Your lordship has perceiv'd, by this time, that this satyrique tragedy, and the Roman satire have little resemblance in any of their features. The very kinds are different: for what has a pastoral tragedy to do with a paper of verses satirically written?—Id. Ib.

What ever since that golden age was done,
What humane kind desires, and what they shun,
Rage, passions, pleasures, impotence of will,
Shall this satyricall collection fill.
Id. Juvenal, Sat. 1. v. 129.

So that the Greek poem, made according to the manner of a satyr, and expressing his qualities, must properly be called satyricall, and not satire.—Id. Ib. Ded.

Horace has written many of them [the odes and epodes] satirically, against his private enemies.—Id. Ib.

Both Horace and Quintilian, give a kind of primacy of honour to Lucilius, amongst the Latin satirists.—Id. Ib.

Libel and satire are promiscuously joined together in the notions of the vulgar, though the satirist and libeller differ as much as the libeller and murderer. In the consideration of human life, the satirist never falls upon persons who are not glaringly faulty, and the libeller on none but who are conspicuously commendable.—Tatler, No. 92.

Covetousness was undoubtedly none of his [Nero] faults;
but it is here described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness.—Dryden. Persius, Sat. 4. Argument.

Horace, the politest writer whom the world ever produced, adopted satirical writing, and succeeded in it, though there is every reason to believe that his natural disposition was not severe.—Knox. Essays, No. 137.

Selfishness, avarice, and voluptuousness, are satirically attributed to them as their distinguished characteristics.

Id. Ib. No. 10.

To maintain the contrary is to satirise his majesty's government; it is to insinuate, that his views and interests are so disjoined from those of his people, that they cannot be effectuated by the uninfluenced concurrence of honest men.—Id. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 37.

SA'TISFY, v.

SATISFACTION.

SATISFACTORY.

SATISFACTORILY.

SATISFACTORINESS.

SA'TISFIER.

Fr. Satisfaire; It. Satisfare, soddissfare; Sp. Satisfacer; Lat. Satisfacere; to do enough. See SATE.

To do enough; as much as may be sought or wished, to content, to fulfil, to please fully; to give or pay enough, as much as may be due or required; to content, to appease; to remove all wish for more, all need of more.

But hallowe ye the lord Crist in youre hertis, and euer more be ye redi to satisfaccoun to ech man axinge you resoun of that feith and hope that is in you, but with myldnesse and drede.—Wiclif. 1 Pet. c. 3.

Graunte me grace of verray penance, confession and satisfaction to don in this present lif, thorgh the benigne grace of him, that is king of kinges and preste of all prestes, that bought us with the precious blode of his herte.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

That masses satisfactory should continue to be sung for souls departed, by priests hired thereunto, I think it not convenient.—Burnet. Records, pt. ii. b. i. No. 25.

Not all so satisfide, with greedy eye

He sought, all round about, his thirsty blade

To bathe in blood of faithlesse enemy.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

— Hereafter, lest (past fates)

Hell be thy headlong home, retire; make bold stand never neare,

Where he advanceth; but his fate, once satisfied, then

beare

A free and full sayle: no Greeke else shall end thee.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

His whole felicity is endlesse strife,

No peace, no satisfaction, crownes his life.

Beaumont. Of the Miserable State of Man.

By a final and satisfactive discernment of faith, we lay the last effects upon the first cause of all things.—Brown.

Now there could be no satisfactory confutation of this atheistical hypothesis, without a fair proposal first made of the several grounds of it to their best advantage.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 175.

Were you able satisfactorily to answer the following queries, this one, while it stands unanswered, would be enough for all.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii.

The substance of a speech made in the House of Commons on Monday 4 Decemb. 1648, touching the satisfactoriness of the king's answer to the propositions of both Houses for settlement of a firm lasting peace, &c. Ibid. 1648.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

A man's own experience may discover unto him, the excellency, satisfactoriness, and the advantageousness of those graces, and virtues that are recommended by Christianity.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 778.

For the transgressions of man, man ought to make satisfaction: but he could not. God could; but he ought not. And therefore, that he might satisfy—both that ought and could, it was fit that the satisfier should be God and man.

Sheridan. Ser. 3. p. 97.

It is very true, that motives, not at all akin to pride, frequently induce those of high rank to neglect or even refuse satisfying their creditors.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 7.

The word satisfaction is frequently employed to express the full accomplishment of some particular desire; which always communicates a temporary pleasure, whatever may be the nature of that desire.—Cogan. Passions, c. 2. § 3.

It was high time to think of settling Omai; and the presence of these chiefs, I guessed, would enable me to do it in the most satisfactory manner.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

SA'TIVE. Lat. Sativus, from satus, past part. of serere, to sow.

Preferring the domestick or sative for the fuller growth.

Evelyn, § 4.

SA'TRAP. } Fr. Satrape; It. Sàtrapo; Sp.

SA'TRAPY. } Satrapa; Lat. Satrapa; Gr. Σατράπης, a Persian word. See the quotation from Beloe's Herodotus.

Yea, the angels themselves, in whom no disorder is fear'd, as the apostle that saw them in his rapture describes, are distinguish'd and quaternion'd into their celestial prince-doms, and satrapies, according as God himself has writ his imperial decrees through the great provinces of heaven.

Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 1.

— Th' innumerable host

Roll back by nations, and admit their lord

With all his *satrap*s.

Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

The government also of this country, which the Persians call a satrapy, is deemed by much the noblest in the empire.

Beloe. History of Herodotus, b. i. c. 192.

SA'TURATE, adj.

SATURA'TION.

SATU'RITY.

To give enough; as much as is wanted, as much as can be received or taken; to fill to excess.

For be the figures of the salts never so various; yet if the atoms of water were fluid and alterable, they wou'd always so conform to those figures, as to fill up all vacuities: and consequently the water would be saturable with the same quantity of any salt, which it is not.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 2.

To both these may be applied the termes of reduplication and saturation: the former, when essence or substance is but once redoubled into it self or into another; the latter, when so oft, that it will not easily admit any thing more.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 2.

Who seeing their saturitie,

And practising to winne

His purples thence, 'Excesse,' he sayd,

'Doth worke access to sinne.'

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 24.

— Still night succeeds,

A soften'd shade, and saturated earth

Awaits the morning-beam.

Thomson. Spring.

The innocent are gay—the lark is gay,

That dries his feathers, saturate with dew,

Beneath the rosy cloud, while yet the beams

Of day-spring over-shoot his humble nest.

Cowper. Task, b. i.

SA'TURDAY. A.S. Sæternes dæg; Saturni dies. See the quotation from Verstegan.

Aftur ech of hem in the wike y clepud ys a day: First (of the) Sonne, & so of othere and the senethe Saturday.

And for weder, & other thing on erthe, aftur hem muche is.

R. Gloucester, p. 113.

And the day unto which we yet give the name of Sater-day, did first receive by being unto him [the Idol Seater] celebrated, the same appellation.

Verstegan. Decayed Intelligence, c. 3.

SATURNAL, n.

SATURNALIAN.

SATURNIAN.

SA'TURNINE.

SA'TURNIST.

Fr. Saturnales, satur-nien; It. Saturnali, satur-nino; Sp. Saturnales, saturnino; Lat. Saturnalia, saturninus.

Saturnalian,—of or pertaining to the Saturnalia, feasts of Saturn; and, consequentially, insubordinate, licentious.

Saturnine,—sad, grave, sedate, gloomy: so applied, because those born under the planet Saturn were said by astrologers to be distinguished by disposition, sad, grave, &c.

Seating himselfe within a darkesome cave, (Such places heavy Saturnists doe crave) Where yet the gladsome day was never seene, Nor Phœbus' piercing beams had ever beene.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

Whether we celebrate the Christian festivals, or the bloody Saturnals, or barbarous bacchanalia, is no greater matter to him, provided our minds be but canker'd with wrath and malice, and cruelty and revenge.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 1.

Here pleas'd behold her mighty wings out-spread To hatch a new saturnian age of lead.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. i.

I may cast my readers unto two general divisions, the Mercurial and the Saturnine. The first are the gay parts of my disciples, who require speculations of wit and humour; the others are those of a more solemn and sober turn, who find no pleasure but in papers of morality and sound sense; the former call every thing that is serious stupid. The latter look upon every thing as impertinent that is ludicrous.

Spectator, No. 179.

Hence so many various systems of morality to suit every man's bent of mind and frame of constitution. The indolent, the active, the sanguine, the flegmatic, and the saturnine, have all their correspondent theories.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Introd.

In order to make this saturnalian amusement general in the family, you sent it down stairs.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

SA'TYR. Fr. Satyre; It. Sàtiro; Sp. Satiro; Lat. Satyrus. See the quotation from Pliny.

Among the western mountains of India the satyres haunt, (the country wherein they are, is called the region of the Cartadali) creatures of all others most swift in foot-manship: which one whiles run with all foure; otherwhiles upon two feet onely like men: but so light-footed they are, that unlesse they be very old or sicke, they can never be taken.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 2.

Scaliger the father will have it descend from Greece to Rome; and derives the word satyre, from satyrus, that mixt kind of animal, or, as the ancients thought him, rural god, made up betwixt a man and a goat; with a humane head, hook'd nose, powting lips, a bunch, or struma under the chin, prick'd ears, and upright horns; the body shagg'd with hair, especially from the waste, and ending in a goat, with the legs and feet of that creature.

Dryden. Juvenal, Ded. p. xvii.

SA'VAGE, adj. Fr. Sauvage; It. Salvaggio, salvatico; Sp. Salvage; SA'VAGE, n. Low Lat. Salvaticus pro silvaticus, in the woods, (silva,) SA'VAGELY. wild, untamed. SA'VAGENESS. Wild, untamed;—as birds or beasts; brutal, ferocious, cruel.

Greekes weening that were yong of age, That this tigre had be savage, And cruelly besetting all the place.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

As salvage bull, whom two fierce mastives bayt, When rancour doth with rage him once engore, Forgets with wary warde them to awayt, But with his dreadfull hornes them drives afore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their grafters?

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iii. sc. 5.

My heart agrieud that such a wretch should raigne, Whose bloodie breast so sauag'd out of kind, That Phalaris had nere so foule a mind.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 442

If this sort once possess the arteries Of forlorn man, madness and stupor seize His salvag'd heart, and death dwells in his eyes.

More. Pre-existence of Souls, (1647) s. 38.

Rosse. Your castle is surpriz'd: your wife, and babes sauagely slaughter'd.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

— Breathe his faults so quaintly, That they may seem the taints of liberty: The flash and out-break of a fiery mind; A savageness in unreclaimed blood, Of general assault.

Id. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 1.

— This is the bloodiest shame, The wildest sauagery, the vildest stroke That euer wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage Presented to the teares of soft remorse.

Id. John, Act iv. sc. 5.

— Her fallow leas, The darnell, hemlock, and ranke femetary, Doth root vpon; while that the culter rusts, That should deracinate such sauagery.

Id. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

And though the blindness of some ferities have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and been so injurious unto worms, as to disenter the bodies of the deceased; yet had they therein no design upon the soul.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 19.

As man in his perfect state is the best of all animals; so seperated from law and right, he is the worst: For out of society we see his nature presently degenerates, and instead of being inclined to assist, grows always most savage and barbarous to his own kind.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

The lion thus, with dreadful anguish stung, Roars through the desert, and demands his young: When the grim savage, to his rifled den Too late returning, snuffs the track of men.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Without thee what were unenlighten'd man? A savage roaming through the woods and wilds, In quest of prey; and with th' unfashion'd fur Rough-clad; devoid of every finer art, And elegance of life.

Thomson. Summer.

— The sullen door, Yet uninfected, on its cautious hinge Fearing to turn, abhors society: Dependants, friends, relations, love himself, Savag'd by woe, forget the tender tie, The sweet engagement of the feeling heart.—Id. Ib.

There can be no true liberty where such licentiousness is suffered with impunity. This is part of the savageness of corrupt nature.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 294.

If we contemplate a savage nation in any part of the globe, a supine indolence and a carelessness of futurity will be found to constitute their general character.

Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 9.

Try if 'twill tame these insolent invaders;
Who thus, in savageness of conquest, claim
Whom chance of war has spar'd.—Mason. Caractacus.

SAVA'NNAH. In the West Indies, (says Delpino,) Savana signifies a plain. And see the quotation from Dampier. But Savana in Spanish, (Delpino also says,) is a large sheet for a bed; and sometimes used for a large linen cloth.

Savannahs are clear pieces of land without woods; not because more barren than the wood-land, for they are frequently spots of as good land as any, and often are intermixt with wood-land.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1683.

The soil however is frequently sandy, and many of the lawns, or savannahs, are rocky and barren.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

SAUCE, n. Fr. Sauce, sauce; It. Salsa; SAUCE, v. Sp. Salsa, from salsus, savoury; SAUCER. Sale as persus. (See INSULSE.) SAUCY. Applied generally to— SAUCILY. Seasoning; to any savoury, SAUCINESS. relishing addition to food. Sauce, met. (as salt also)—

Seasoning; wit or humour carried to excess, in contempt of superiors; and hence,—impudent language; impudence.

To sauce,—to season; to add, or intermix seasoning, or any addition to the main thing.

Saucer,—a vessel to contain sauce; or to be used for any similar purpose.

Ac here sauce was over soure. and unsavourylike grounde
In a morter post mortem. of meny bitere peynes.
Piers Plouhman, p. 244.

Wo was his coke, but if his sauce were Poinant and sharpe, and ready all his gere.
Chaucer. Prolog. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 234.

Such sauce, as they haue serued,
To me without desart,
Euen as they haue deserued
Therof God send them part.—Wyatt. The Louer suspected.

They sent vs succor sauit with soure despite,
They saued our liues and spoylde vs of the rest,
They stole our goods by day and eke by night,
They shewed the worst and closely kept the best.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande, (an. 1572.)

Miso, to whom chearfulness in others was ever a sauce of envy in her self, took quickly mark of his behaviour.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

And ever among she would sauce her speeches with such bastinadoes, that poor Dametas began now to think, that either a general madding was fallen, or else that all this was but a vision.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

Miso had no sooner espied Basilius, but that as spitefully, as her rotten voice could utter, she set forth the sauiness of Amphialus.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

— If it be so, as fast
As she answers thee with frowning lookes, ile sauce
Her with bitter words: why looke you so vpon me?
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 5.

Nay we entermingle all climats and coasts of heaven and earth to satisfie our appetite: for to one kind of meat wee must have drugs and spices fetcht as far as from India: to another, out of Ægypt, Candie, and Cyrene: and in one word, for every dish wee have a several land to find us sauce.—Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 26.

— I remember
My father would prefer the boys he kept
To greater men than he. but did it not,
Till they were grown too sauy for himself.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act ii. sc. 1.

Yet into closets sauily dar'st peep,
Telling for truth what thou canst but suppose,
Divulging that which thou should'st not disclose.
Drayton. Legend of Robert, Duke of Normandy.

And here I cannot pretermitt
To that epitome of wit, Knowledge and art, to him whom we Sauily call, and I more sauily
Presume to write the little d.
Cotton. Ep. to John Bradshaw, Esq.

3. How now, Goodman Squitter-breech, why do you lean

3. Will you sir sauce-box?
1. Cit. Look if one ha' not struck Philip.
Beaum. & Fletch. A King and no King, Act i.

— When sparkling bowls go round,
And tunnies' tales, in savoury sauce are drown'd,
Thou mutter'st prayers obscene.—Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

Cam. (crying out) Ah, madam, 'tis he himself; but he's as big again as he us'd to be, with eyes like sauicers.

Dryden. An Evening's Love, Act iv.

And because none should remember his practises, nor suspect the rest to come, he shaveth his crown as broad as a sauicer.—Strype. Mem. Mary, vol. iv. c. 35.

A very little wit joined with a great deal of sauiness, will enable a man to make sport with the most serious arguments.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 3.

— And the brown loaf
Lodg'd on the shelf, half eaten without sauce
Of sav'ry cheese, or butter, costlier still.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

But if I put it [a snow-ball] into a saucepan over the fire it will lose its specific essence, being turned into water, and
